Many new routes up the ancient slopes have been found this year. Accompanied by the guide Lockmatter, of Zermatt-one of the most celebrated in Switzerland — a young Londoner named Ryan set out recently from Chamounix and by a new route ascended the Aiguille Verte, 13,500 feet up, a peak considered by many as the most stubborn and dangerous in the Mont Blanc region. In the same week he scaled the Aiguille de Grepon and also the Charmez and Blaitiere, all upwards of 11,000 feet, and in each case he chose a pioneer path.

In the Bernese Oberland a new way was found up the Jungfrau by Herr Hasler, a Swiss, while M.
