Mr. McPhillips contrasted the position taken by the Liberal Conservative party of Canada, which comes out boldly for protection, with the shifting attitude of the opposition, who even themserves, as by their most recent utterances, have what they would offer in the shape of a trade policy if they got into power. He contrasted the comparatively light depression existing in Canada with the grav and serious distress that in other and older countries had been experienced recently from greater freedom disaster, such as had befallen other countries, is largely her sound fiscal policy. If by any great mis-fortune the Liberals were to get into power what would they do? It is all very well for them now to declare in glittering generalities for free trade as they have it in England, but if they had a chance to re-adjust afternoon. the tariff to suit themselves, how could they do it? They say, take out the element of protection and strike away the duties on manufactured goods coming into this country, but if they did this it meant direct taxation; and then if perchance a deputation should go to Ottawa to ask the Minister of Finance in a Liberal government for relief, it might happen that the same old friend of the workingmen, Sir Richard Cartwright, would again reply as he did once to a deputation of farmers: "Go home; eat less; work more."
