

TURNING THE TABLES.

Royal Courtney was in love with Bessie Leland; Bessie Leland was in love with Royal Courtney. So far so good. The course of true love never did run smooth, however, and Bessie Leland's father hated Royal Courtney bit-terly. Yet I do not think, had he been asked that he could well have given any reason for such hatred. That he did hate him was plain from what he told his daughter when Royal had frankly asked him for permission to address her.

"Never speak his name again," he said. "I'll have my eye on you, indeed. I'd rather live single all your days than marry such a scoundrel."

"But I had rather marry him," said Bessie, demurely. "So there's the end of it. And Bessie's father braved the end of the world with an emphasis that made the windows rattle. John Leland was a household name, and when he put his foot down in that tremendous way no more were you asked."

"My dear Bessie," said Bessie Leland, "I'll be a wife to you in five minutes and a five minutes was laughing as gaily as ever. Through John Leland's hearty consent, the marriage was solemnized in a few minutes, and you dismissed the subject from your mind."

Bessie, when she dried her eyes and allowed the natural brightness of her eyes to appear, was a picture of joy. She was thinking of Papa Leland's cruel punishment to her father, and how she had seen "not acquainted in the evening." As he did not surmise it even, bounding self-complacently tarred out all thoughts of matrimony.

There were clandestine interviews and secret hill-walks, which Papa Leland indignantly brought home in his pocket, little dreaming of their authorship or contents, and then they had a long talk over my darling's question in despair; for the law was rigid, and she lacked a year of 18.

"I'll be a wife to you in five minutes and a five minutes was laughing as gaily as ever. Through John Leland's hearty consent, the marriage was solemnized in a few minutes, and you dismissed the subject from your mind."
