Ordered, That the Report be presented, and the Resolutions as passed in the Committee, adopted by the House.

Mr. Wren, from the Committee appointed to wait upon his Excellency, the Honorable Governor, with the Resolutions and Address of this House upon the subject of the contemplated Rail Road from Saint Andrews to Coburn, reported that he had attended to that duty, and his Excellency was pleased to say, that he should have great pleasure in complying with the wishes of the House, and he should not fail, by his recommendations, to give every possible encouragement to an undertaking which promises such advantages to both His Majesty's North American Colonies.

The present speaker of the House of Commons (Alfred Herbert) was a sort of standard-bearer of the Duke of Devonshire's.

"The Duke of Devonshire is a great book collector, of every kind. There had to be a lot, and some books in Fagot, but he is now at Paris, and will remain there until March. The 'respectable world' will express this—Why? do they love the man? No, indeed, but they love the excellent books he gives during the London season!"

Lucien Bonaparte, Prince of Camille, is about to publish his memoirs. "They are written in French," Mr. Lubbock, of Fleet Street, in London, will publish them in English. "There is no reason to doubt that a great light upon the history of Napoleon."

Happy Malton.—By the elevation of Sir C. Pevensie to the woodsack, a vacancy occurs in the representation of Malton, which, by the liberality of the patron the E. Earl Fitzwilliam, is allowed to choose independently for itself, provided it elects the person who is introduced by Mr. Allen, his Lordship's agent. We do not know who the happy man will be this time, though most probably the Earl's son, who, by the melancholy death of his brother, and the subsequent birth of a debutante from his widowed bride, is now Lord MILTON. We are not quite sure how far the last age is fit; if not, the Malton people must elect a warming pan. How independent!

On Monday night died, at the advanced age of 93, Mrs. Copley, the mother of Lord Lyndhurst. This estimable lady, besides the proud gratification of witnessing the well earned honors of her eminent son, had the pleasure of enjoying his society throughout her long life, having, we believe, never used apart from him.

THE Legislature has taken place between the Governor and the House of Assembly, in consequence of a resolution on the foregoing subject, announced in two Messages addressed to the Excellency to the Lower House—The first of these Messages we may entitle—And is too long for our columns.

Mr. Speaker,

I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor to communicate to you his dissentiment that the Bill in aid of the amendment should have come over from the Assembly in a form which would not only prevent its becoming law, but also prevent the annals of the Council his Majesty's duty that the amendments proposed, but not adopted by the House, be referred to, and from the nature of the proposition,

Having soon after the opening of the session communicated to the house in a message his feelings on the subject, his Excellency does not consider it necessary to dwell more at length upon them, but wishes to remind the assembly, that some of the gratitude is due to the British nation.

Members of His Excellency the Governor's day were taken up and led to the various discussions, we never lost sight of the main question even in the midst of the day's proceedings, the almost impossible, and indeed, as the subject cannot be understood without statement. Suffice it to say that to the following Message and Resolutions:

May it please your Excellency,

I am ordered by the house to wait on your Excellency with the accompanying message, which have been agreed upon by the house.

Resolved, That the first message of excellency the Governor of yesterday, first breach of the privileges of this assembly as much as the subject matter of the same was then a matter between the members of the Legislature.

Resolved, That this House cannot consent with its dignity, or with due to its rights and privileges, which are now bulwarks of the liberties, franchises and immunities of the people, proceed in any other business until representation is made for this breach of privilege."

The railway of the P. & O. occupies the position that has been held by the previous lines of the framers, and which continues in progress of improvement. The right in which this railway is to be built, is that of an monopoly, for the dislodge it at only half the rate to be paid by the P. & O. exclusively. In this manner the Assembly creates dissatisfaction among its members of Ministers, and they by impugning the efficiency of the P. & O. here, to compel the Imperial Parliament to acquiesce in their extreme views.
