

had the honour of once preaching before the Queen, and the sermon was afterwards published, and had an immense circulation. He survived beyond the age of three-score and ten, and died early in 1892.

Dr. Donald Fraser, of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, has been called to his reward. He was a student in Knox College, Toronto. His first pastorate was in Montreal, where he remained eight years. Then for eleven years he ministered in his native city, Inverness, Scotland, whence he removed to London. He was only ill ten days when the Master called him home.

James Calvert. Few readers of the Missionary enterprise are ignorant of Fiji, where for generations cannibalism abounded. This devoted man went thither in 1838, and for eighteen years laboured among the most wicked people, we should suppose, who ever lived. He next spent five years in England, and saw the Bible printed in the language of Fiji. In 1861 he again went forth, and spent five years more among the heathen. Once more he returned to England, but soon went to Africa, and laboured indefatigably for eight years, after which he returned to his native land. He was permitted to live to the age of fourscore, and then died in the triumphs of faith.

H. E. Stoney. This young brother was a probationer in Niagara Conference, and a student in Victoria University. He was expected to be ordained at the approaching Conference, but, on March 19th, he took a sail in a skiff from Cobourg harbour, and was overtaken by a storm which upset the skiff, and Bro. Stoney sunk.

Rev. J. Aspinall, of the Primitive Methodist Church, England, died at Oldham, at the age of seventy-four. He was an itinerant forty-six years, the last ten of which he was superannuated.

Jabez R. Jacques, D.D., Ph.D., LL.D., Vice-President of Hedding College, at Abingdon, Ill., has been called to join the great majority. In 1875 he was appointed successor of the Rev. Dr. Carman, to the Presidency of Albert College, Belleville, when that gentleman was elected Bishop of the late Methodist Episcopal Church. He remained in that important position until 1883, when he returned to the United States. All who knew Principal Jacques pronounced him to be a true Christian, an able scholar, and an excellent preacher.

Dr. Cook died at his home in Quebec, March 31st, at the age of eighty-seven. The deceased, though a native of Scotland, was a resident in Canada since 1836. For more than fifty years he was pastor of the Presbyterian Church in the ancient city in which he died. For many years he was ex-Chancellor of Queen's University, Kingston, and was principal of Morrin College.

W. J. Little, of London Conference died March 10th. He commenced his probation for the ministry in 1879, so that his career as a minister was short. He was a young man of great promise. A widow and two children, and many friends, mourn his early demise.

S. G. Phillips of Montreal Conference entered the ministry in 1853, and for the most part the whole of his ministerial life was confined to the Province of Quebec. He was a man of great amiability, and laboured earnestly, both in the pulpit and through the press, to bring sinners to a knowledge of the truth. Early in March he was called to his heavenly home.

James Gaddis, was a native of Ireland, where he was converted, and became a class-leader and local preacher. After residing some time in Canada, he was called to enter the ministry of the Methodist New Connexion. For thirteen years he laboured with great zeal, and then became supernumerary, in which relation he remained until his removal to the better world. He died at Kincardine in January of the present year.
