

2

fresh interest and a more intelligent appreciation of what took place. And although when I am all through I shall have touched only the fringes or perhaps I should better say a few of the spots on the surface, I can understand what remains more clearly because I can localize the scenes and events by associating them with what I have seen and learned.

To-day we made a tour of the Scott country. The weather was perfect, the scenery beautiful and the historical sights unusually interesting and enlightening. Scott's name seems to be associated with the whole region from places where he went to school, or lived for a time to the