Dear General Burns,

I was in Edinburgh for a day or two and picked up some more information regarding W. M. Neil.

I am told that when in the R. A. M. C., he was promoted to the rank of Major, he suffered from profound swelling of the head. Others have suffered from the same affection, but in this case he took upon himself to amuse those of lesser rank, and has been described to me as insufferable.

When there was some row about nurses. Who was to blame I don't know but our friends got so busy that, I believe certain nurses were sent home. I don't know the rights or wrongs of the matter, but I am told that he was tactless, and unnecessarily interfering. Certainly the nurses thought they had been unfairly treated and one of them
