Seating the Members.

One of the most difficult tasks which falls to the lot of the Sergeant-at-Arms on the election of a new House of Commons is the allotting of the seats of members. In view of a change of Government, this task is rendered all the more difficult now. The principle which has governed in the past has been to give the old members their choice of seats, allotting off what are known as the front benches, coming specially under the supervision of the Government and leader of the Oposi
