boy's foot. The lake being calm on Saturday morning, three young girls secured a rowboat, and took a trip up to what is commonly called "The Gulley," a small inlet about two and a half miles west of the lighthouse. They were so much interested in exploring the gulley that they did not notice that the sea was rising, until they were ready to go home. By that large whitecaps were visible. The young ladies, naturally afraid to venture out into the lake in their frail bark, were forced to leave the craft in the gulley and walk home. Mr. M. M. Black and family, of
