PROBE QUESTION

Governmental Red Tape Has Odd Demonstration.

History of Defunct Bovine Recorded in Official Parliamentary Paper.

London, May 23.-British Government business is just as much tangled up by red tape as ever it was. Dickens is popularly supposed to have ridiculed much of it out of existence, but in reality he accomplished little. In proof whereof, I submit this story of the Purley cow which has just been made attention is being directed towards the subject of a parliamentary "white" the Hudson Bay route as a means of paper, "ordered by the House of Commons to be printed" as is duly set forth in the precious document itself and "printed for his majesty's stationery office by Eyre and Spottiswoode, printers to the King's most excellent

That proving unsatisfactory, a $4,000 a year assistant commissioner of charity journeyed to Purley first-class-his traveling and hotel expenses are paid by the Governmentand summoned all the parish officials to a solemn inquiry into the matter, which was held in the village schoolroom. Oaths were administered and evidence taken, and no doubt the air round about was electric with excitement. It is hardly conceivable that the Purley cow itself, when alive over 200 years ago, ever created such a profound sensation. In his report the assistant commissioner of charity recapitulates everything that Parliament had previously done to revive the memory of the cow He concludes by stating that in 1837, Edward Sherwood, as overseer of the poor of Purley, was the custodian of the £6 cow money. "Since his death," he adds, "there has been no payment, and the money cannot be traced, but it is said that his descendants can."

That leaves the door open for some fussy official or inquisitive M. P. to resurrect the cow at any time in the near or remote future, by demanding to be informed if any efforts have been made to trace the descendants of Mr. Sherwood, and if not, why not, and so on. Meanwhile the taxpayers have had to pay a large sum for publishing the ridiculous report.
