THEN AND NOW

In days of old, when knights were bold,
What meant their lack of feet?
One got no start when auto cars
Went whizzing past one's ears.
One's saddle horse kept on his course
And calmly switched the fly.
No honking horn at night and morn
Made one to jump or die.

In days of old no bikes were sold
With engines popping loud.
No cycling chap in leather cap
Ploved thru a shrieking crowd.
No bags of sand shot to the hand
From gas bag over the side.
Most any knave could be deemed brave
Ere age of gasoline.

Decline of the Boatwain.

The rumored disestablishment of boatwains, as an anachronism dating from the day of sail, is no more likely to come to pass than the extermination of the carpenter as a survival of the wooden age. But the former class have had little enough share in the general improvement of service conditions. What was said in Truth the other day as to the gunners getting all the plums out of pudding is particularly borne out by one grievance under which the boatwain labor. In 1891 there were nearly 400 boatwains and a like number of gunners. The respective proportion of half and warrants were about equal. To-day there are 262, including 12 lieutenants and 27 warrants, while there are 840 gunners, including 26 lieutenants and 78 warrants. The expansion of the latter branch is a natural and necessary corollary of the growth of the fleet, but it is equally true that the shrinkage of the former class is unnatural and unnecessary.—London Truth.

Maud: Jack is telling around that you are worth your weight in gold.
Ethel: The foolish boy. Who is he telling it to?
Maud: His creditors.—Denver Times.

"JULIAN SALE"

THE NAME THAT STANDS FOR QUALITY

There's a place for the Wardrobe Trunk in the Summer Home

Apart from the comfort, convenience, and completeness of a Wardrobe Trunk as the actual travelling requisite, when you have reached your destination—especially your summer home—see what it would mean you not to have to disturb your costumes and dresses, but just leave everything in the wardrobe trunk as you would have them in your closet or wardrobe—and then on the opposite side to that, one "Chest of Drawers" to carry the smaller things in wear.
