There was a special praise service in the church, the choir was strengthened by some outside vocalists and the pretty little church was crowded to the doors, it having been found necessary to have chairs placed in the aisles to accommodate those who were present to listen to

With outstretched arms the reverend With outstretched arms the reverend gentleman implored the congregation to remain in their seats and then turning to the choir asked the singers to sing a hymn. It was a few moments before some of those in the choir could calm themselves enough to sing, so excitable were many of the people in the congregation and so loud was the noise. Finally a few of the less excitable began a hymn and as the whole choir sang "Jesus Lover of My Soul," the music seemed to soothe the audience, but before quietness was obtained a large portion of the congregation had left the church.
