VAN-DUZEN-HAMILTON. The marriage of Miss Adell Hamilton, eldest daughter of Mr. H. Hamilton, of Grand Bend, to Mr. E. B. Van-Duzen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Van-Duzen, Chatham, was quietly solemnized St. Andrews' manse, Chatham, at o'clock, Wednesday, February 16, the Rev. A. S. Orton officiating. The bride wore a smart blue satin dress, trimmed with silk net and silver, and a hat to match. The matron of honor was Mrs. Earl Faubert, the best man Mr. Earl Faubert. After the honeymoon the happy couple will reside in Chatham.

GRAY-WILSON. A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mrs. Robert Wilson, of Lobo, Ont., on February 17, at 6 o'clock, when her youngest daughter, Rosalie M., became the bride of Mrs. and Mrs. W. Alva Gray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carling Gray, London Township. The ceremony was performed by Rev. L. Bartlett, of St. Johns Methodist Church.

The bride was attired in a dainty gown of white silk, with georgette trimming, and hand embroidery. She carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses. Little Miss Lillian Faulder, niece of the bride, who acted as flower girl, looked charming in a pink silk frock, and carried a basket containing pink and white carrations, in which the and white carnations, in which the ring was concealed.

That day we first met—that wonderful, enchanted afternoon-I ought to have told you They walked rapidly along the illacbordered alley.
At a bend in it they heard a sudden sound of voices. One was clear, sweet and high-pitched.
"Charlle," it sald, "oh, Charlle, isn't it wonderful to be together and alone?"
Before they could stop themselves they had come upon the speaker. Betty caught her breath and Trevor stared, astounded.

call next day—to tell you that I cared—but I was weak—I couldn't stop myself-something stronger than me had got me in its grip."

He almost groaned aloud. "You asked me a moment ago if I cared," he said. "Ah, Betty, you'll never understand how much and how deeply I do love you!"

An enchanting little flush mounte to the girl's forehead. "Care for you?" he went on, hotly.
"The word's ridiculous in its utter failure to express all I feel! Oh, I suppose it's wrong of me, but, Betty, you've got to listen—just this once, till I convince you! No—don't interrupt— Jack moved a little nearer to Betty on the bench.

"There was once upon a time a boy," he said, "just an ordinary, fairly decent-hearted boy, with all a boy's faults and failings. He never knew his father—he'd died when the boy was quite a kid—and his mother, too, died soon afterwards."

"So he was left alone, to grow up as best he could.

"So he was left alone, to grow up as best, he could.

Again Trevor cleared his throat.

The was cursed with one unfortunate circumstance," he continued, "the kid had too much money."

"Men liked him pretty well—or liked his money."

Trevor gave a cynical hitle laugh. "This was when he grew older. He was horrfoly shy of grisholder. He was horrfoly shy of grishmoney again! The boy soon discovered money again! The was horrfoly shy of grishmoney again! The boy soon discovered money again! The was horrfolly shy of grishmoney."

"She grew gradually more real, more vital in his life. Ferhaps you can't understand it? But it's true.

"He lost his shyness of girls in looking for her, his little Dream Lady. He even braved the terrors of parties, dances, suppers. For one day, somehow, somewhere, he was certain he should find her."

Trevor paused a moment in his narrative.

"His looking didn't do him any soud." The man beside her laughed his cynical laugh again. "He learned a good many things about the world a good many things about the world a good many things about the world which almost completely disillusioned him. And, at last, after many experiences, it seemed to him that his Dream Girl didn't exist.

"So he gave up hoping—as, I sunpose, many another better man has done before him.

"He plunged into the galeties and foolishness of a certain set. The women in it were as different from his Dream Girl as—as night is from day. But he told himself impatiently that he couldn't spend life with—with a shadow.

"To crown his folly he went and got—engaged—to a girl in that particular set. No, he didn't love her, Betty. He was only—only rather sorry for her. She told him she was—lonely—like himself. And—she was poor. He knew that he could help her—that his money could. Just at first he thought she was was poor. He knew that he discovered afterwards.
