

is indeed a very large one, and I have been even more impressed with the opportunities of it since seeing something more of the camps.

I do not know that I have any suggestions to make just at present, beyond advising you to get hold of such books as "Twenty Years at Hull House" by Jane Addams, "An Introduction to the Study of Society" by Small and Vincent, and publications dealing with welfare work, such as the bulletin issued by the United States Steel Corporation, the weekly bulletins published for the Pennsylvania Railroad System, one of which is enclosed, and other like publications. They may be helpful by way of stimulating thought and ideas rather than affording exact models for anything to be followed. All social work has to be peculiarly and specially related to conditions as they are in the fields in which it may be applied; but a good idea worked out in one field is likely to be helpful in others. It may be that from time to time I shall come across publications that are likely to be of service to you, and if so, I will try to remember to bring them to your attention.

With all good wishes for success in your work, Believe me,

Yours sincerely,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING

W. L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume 26