

PAGE BLURRED /
PAGE BARBOUILLEE

C164588

Nevertheless -- he pointed to the need for continued effort -- when he went on to say: --

"Law has been contemptuously called the governing of the living by the dead; but we can never escape from our historic continuity with the past. It is inevitable that the past should govern the present; but the present is only the passing moment, and each succeeding generation makes its own contribution, however meagre, to the living growth of law."