

33. He told them that if he accepted the position it would be with the distinct understanding that sufficient capital be furnished to put the institution on a paying basis. 34. They were filled with astonishment at the barbaric manner of the natives. 35. Our natural instincts teach us the difference between right and wrong. 36. It was very obvious that the deformity of the tree was due to the roots not being allowed to take their natural course. 37. The large department store carries a full line of suits, shoes, millinery, et cetera. 38. They were called before the Board of Examiners individually. 39. The orchard was infested with microscopic insects which caused its decay.

40. Where there is an abiding faith in the omnipotence of God there is no worry. 41. The barbaric practice of capital punishment by decapitation is no longer permitted. 42. Although the man had a very dignified bearing and a most benignant manner, his actions at times were such as to cause his fellow workers to be suspicious of him. 43. The benevolent millionaire always held himself in subservience to the needs of those with whom he came in contact who had been less fortunate than he. 44. When they visited the United States for the first time they were particularly impressed with the remarkable beauty of the natural scenery which they found it almost impossible to describe to their friends.

Similar Outlines—Remarks

In shortening a stroke to add N or M or lengthening a stroke for T or D some of the outlines will be alike, but writing in "Juxtaposition" to show when a vowel precedes distinguishes between most of the similar outlines. Context will separate most of what is left; but where the context fails a small straight brief stroke may be written near the final end of the last stroke in an outline to represent the word least used. Where a vowel follows a word that cannot be expressed by the preceding stroke it may be expressed by a dot written in line with the last stroke and near it. In writing