Mr. Garretson argued that the effect of an increased wage or dividends should not be considered when it was obvious that employees were not being paid a proper wage.

"A bankrupt road cannot buy its coal any cheaper than one that is paying 33 per cent., then why should any road buy its labor for less than its worth because a proper wage would decrease its profits?"

Attacking the railways plea for arbitration as insincere, but Mr. Garretson insisted that it was not offered to men who were so poorly
