I laid my paddle down and awaited developments. Bang! went the nose of the dugout against the tree, and the porcupine dropped, but not into the water. He landed in the bow of the canoe, and the horrified look on my friend's face was a delight to see.

"Look at that porky!" he called to me. "In going to ram the canoe into the tree and knock him off into the water. Just you watch, and you'll see some fun."

I laid my paddle down and awaited developments. Bang! went the nose of the dugout against the tree, and the porcupine dropped, but not into the water. He landed in the bow of the canoe, and the horrified look on my friend's face was a delight to see.

"Great Scott! He's coming straight at me!" I saw the paddle rise in the air and come down with a tremendous whack, but it seemed to have little effect. The porky's coat of quill and hair was so thick that a blow on the back did not trouble him much. If my friend could have hit him across the nose it would have ended the matter then and there, but the canoe was too narrow and its sides too high for a crosswise stroke.

My friend couldn't even kick, for he was kneeling on the bottom of the dugout, and if he tried to stand up he would probably capsize.

Just then the canoe drifted round so that I could look into it, and I beheld the porcupine bearing down on helpless friend like Birnam Wood on its way to Dunsinane, his ruffles of quills erect, fire in his little black eyes and a thirst for vengeance in his whole aspect. My friend made one or two final and ineffectual jabs at him and then gave it up.

"It's no use!" he called. "I've got to tip over," and the next instant the canoe was upside down and both belligerents were in the water.

The porcupine floated high, and quickly made his way to the beach and disappeared in the woods. My friend righted his canoe and we resumed our journey.

Manager W. A. Brady's press representative has coined the phrase "The play that will live forever," which he makes free to use acent "Way Down East." Perhaps he is a trifle premature, but on the face of the return he is not far wrong.

The celebrated rural play as already seen several seasons, and that length of time in things theatrical, brings a play to old age. But "Way Down East," has not even thought of outliving its usefulness. Three companies representing the play are booked solid for three years to come.

Undoubtedly the majority of theatre-goers have seen the play but there is a certain fascination that brings them to the theatre for a second and even third visit.

Then again the local manager will tell you that "Way Down East" brings people to the theatre who will not be seen at any other play during the entire season.

Manager Brady has wisely kept his companies and productions up to their original excellence of standing, and so long as he continues along the same lines, "Way Down East" will remain the mainstay of his growing bank account.

A feast for the eye, and pleasure for the senses, such as the revival of "Twelfth Night" with Miss Marie Wainwright as Viola, which Manager Jules Murry will present here on Wednesday, November 2nd, at the Grand Opera House. The success of play star, company and production has been phenomenal, not only financially, but artistically as well.

Wherever Miss Wainwright has appeared the full capacity of the theatre has been tested, and the most glowing eulogiums have been showered upon her and her support. In all the wide range of English dramatic literature there is no play so diversified of incident and character as "Twelfth Night." Shakespeare never showed versatility in his study of men in a more marked degree, nor touched them off with more delicious humor than in the variety of characters he brings into view in this charming comedy.

Wright is the best Viola on the American stage seems to be the consensus of the general critical opinion, and that as Cessario, that is, as Viola in male attire, she is the most exquisite picture, a beautiful vision of supreme grace is the generally conceded fact.

Major Richardson considers that the best dogs for ordinary work in the field are black or sable collies. Intelligence, not breed, however, is the chief consideration. The Russians have adopted the Caucasian dog; France favors the "amuglers" dog; well known on her frontiers; Austria employs Dalmatians; Turkey finds Asiatic sheep dogs most suitable and Germany generally selects collies.

The trained dog can be employed in a number of ways. He may act as a scout, as an outpost to the outposts; in an actual engagement his services are readily available for the transport of reserve ammunition to the firing line. In a siege of investment he may be used as a sentry and in this capacity would prove invaluable in guarding against surprise.

But it is in ambulance work that the dog may provide the greatest service to man and it is to this special and important phase that Major Richardson has devoted many years, training his dogs to perform their life-saving work with almost human human skill and intelligence.

The beginning of training for field service is to take the dog at night to some quiet spot and have an assistant creep up slowly toward dog and master. The dog scents the approach and gives warning by growling—barking being always checked by the trainer, since in war time it would betray the dog's presence to the enemy.

In ambulance work, the dog, finding a wounded man, lies down beside him and the man, if not too seriously injured, helps himself to the brandy carried by the dog in a flask upon its back.

The dog also carries bandages, a waterproof sheet, a pencil and a piece of paper. The wounded man scribbles a hasty note to inform his comrades in what part of the field to find him; then, intimating to the dog by a wave of the hand that it is to return, the dog dashes off again to the ambulance headquarters.

He is despatched at once, the ambulance party being led to the spot by the dog itself. The wounded man
