Wellington's Statues.

On Tuesday, June 18, 1844, the anniversary of his final victory at Waterloo over the French and their emperor, Napoleon Bonaparte, in 1815, an equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington was unveiled in front of the Royal Exchange, London. It was the work of Sir Francis Legatt Chantrey, the famous sculptor, who had, however, died in 1842, when sixty-one years of age. Frederick Augustus the Second, King of Saxony, was then visiting Queen Victoria, and though his predecessor of those names had allied with the French, and thereby for a time increased his own territories, this successor was amongst the crowd on the occasion, and joined heartily in the cheering. Another equestrian statue of the Duke was in 1846 erected opposite Apsley House, his residence at Hyde Park Corner, in London, but was taken down in 1883, and set up at Aldershot, the great military camp. It was replaced by a smaller statue in 1888 at the original site. Wellington is similarly honoured by statues at Glasgow, Edinburgh and Dublin, and a pillar was erected to him at Wellington a Somersetshire market-town, the place from which he, as Arthur Wellesley, third son of the Earl of Mornington, took his title. Abroad, in British Colonies, there is Wellington, capital of New Zealand. He died on September 14, 1852, at Walmer Castle, near Deal, his residence as Lord Warden of the Cinque, or Five, Ports, or of the south-east coast of England, when eighty-three years old, but was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral with unexampled magnificence. In England his most valuable monument is Wellington College, Sandhurst, in Berkshire, erected and endowed by £159,000 subscribed originally for the support and education of orphan sons of officers, accommodating 250 boys. But now other boys also are educated there, who wish for military training as cadets.

A Plea for Improvement.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—About a year ago the City Council effected a very great improvement by lessening the width of the unsightly raised sidewalk between Government House Gate and St. Thomas's Church, giving the space thus gained to the street where it has been of much advantage. It does not, however, require a very artistic nor an utilitarian eye to perceive that a much greater measure of improvement is easily possible of attainment in that locality and no doubt had the Council had the required funds at its disposal when the work was begun it would have been carried out on a more comprehensive scale.

The embankment in question extends from Government House south gate to King's Bridge Road, past, and in too close contiguity to St. Thomas's Church, marred the appearance of the church and the approaches thereto and must be a source of inconvenience to its congregation. It is beside, an eyesore in one of our best city localities. One's mind's eye can visualise the transformation that would be incurred as a slight 'berme' removal of this embankment clear through to King's Bridge Road. The appearance of the street would be revolutionized. St. Thomas's would stand in the centre of a fairly large uniformly level plot, and a more presentable and convenient sidewalk would be available to the public—the present railing on the north side of the church could, if desired, be replaced on the lower level that would be attained. No cost for walling would be incurred as a slight 'berme' and a slope similar to that now protecting the street face of the embankment would effectually protect the Government House Grounds fence. In fact the slope could be made quite attractive by plastering its face to a depth of three inches with puddled soil, or clay and a little fertilizer, in which lawn grass seed had been mixed.

A portion of the material of the embankment could probably be utilized for street repairs, certainly much of it could be used with very great advantage in improving the cross-section curvature of many of our streets—in this respect some of our streets are especially faulty where they cross or intersect others. Better still, however, would it be if the City Council could see its way to beginning the entire remodelling of Bannerman Park—a first step in which would be the raising to a uniform gradient, as a uniform level is out of the question, of the broken surfaced central portion between the band-stand and Military Road. This would make a short haul for the excavated material from the embankment and materially lessen the cost.

Bannerman Park is such only by courtesy of title and as it is now cannot be improved or made develop a single attractive feature. Some day its remodelling will have to be undertaken, and the sooner the better and the more economically the work may be done; as each year the few trees already planted will be growing larger and increasingly difficult to re-align—nor can additional plantings be made until an acceptable design for its lay-out be available.

However the material be disposed of, there can be no question that the measure of advantage to be gained by the removal of the embankment on Military Road will justify its being done promptly. Yours truly,

TURKISH TREACHERY.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 17. Turkish Nationalist troops on Tuesday attacked a company of British Indian troops on Ismid front, who were withdrawing under agreement. The Turks wounded thirty and captured a British intelligence officer. Reinforcements were sent to the assistance of the Indians, while warships kept the Turks off by shelling their positions. The trouble started when British outposts, consisting of a company of Punjabis, was surrounded by a superior force of Nationalists. The British officer commanding decided to withdraw. An agreement was reached with the Nationalists, who promised not to hamper the British retreat. The British advance guard was allowed to pass unmolested, but the Nationalists fired on the main body. Although it is considered certain that Mustafa Kemal Pasha, head of the Turkish Nationalist Government at Ankara, was chagrined by the fact that the British were barring the way to Scutari, opposite Constantinople, there is nothing in the reports on the incident to show that he ordered the attack on the British.

Obituary.

Again we record, with deepest sympathy, a visit from the Great Reaper, who, on June 9th, gathered for his harvest an estimable young lady of St. Joseph's, Mary J. Gushue, youngest daughter of Mrs. McGrath. She was in the vigor of life, and always enjoyed good health till a few months ago, when she contracted a cold, which held her in her victim, the effects wasting her strength until she passed to her eternal home. She bore her illness with Christian fortitude, and resignation, being strengthened with all the consolation of Holy Church, and receiving every comfort and care loving friends could give. As the church bell tolled out its mournful echoes, the funeral procession wended its way to the little cemetery beyond, where the last obsequies were offered by Rev. Fr. Enright, then her mother remains were laid to rest in her mother earth, amid the tears and mournings of her relatives. Her life was exemplary of good works, and filial duty; and the many wreaths and floral tributes laid on her casket and thrown in her grave, with the many expressions of sympathy to her sorrowing friends, testified that she was a general favorite in the community. To her dear mother, to whom she is an irreparable loss, to Mr. McGrath, as well as to her brothers and sisters, we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

"We do not enjoy you, your well-earned rest beyond the ebb and flow of mortal tide; Until, in an unchanging and immortal land We shall be reunited side by side." —COM.
