The Dying Year.

"Ring out wild Bells to the wild The flying cloud, the frosty light,

The year is dying in the night, Ring out vild Bells and let him die." The sands in the glass of 1920 are fast rolling out, and the rosy, jocund, young New Year, a cherub of inexperience and confident enthusiasm, stands with tip-toe on the eastern horizon ready to take up the course of 1921. The New Year's coming is an influential event in the lives of all of us, and induces both retrospect and a looking forward with hope to better things in the coming year, for as "Hope springs eternal in the human Man never is, but always to be blest." In our own country we have had a year, just closing, that will be a memorable one in our history from various view points, and we have had our share of the general depression that seems to be the inevitable aftermath of all great wars. On the whole we have come through in much better condition than other countries and so far there has been no such economic climax reached that has overwhelmed the people of the old world. Let us hope that we have seen the worst with the going out of 1920, and that the New year opening tonight will be the turning point in our economic situation, and that Old Terra Nova, that has in the past overcome so many crises, will advance day by day on the road to prosperity. A great deal depends on ourselves If we wish to have conditions better, each man and woman individually can accomplish their share. There is necessary to this end more unity, tolerance and forbearance, less political Monday, January 3rd. All the services

A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS

Ever Found.

(By Malcolm Parsons.)

To-day we stand in the Valley Of Attainment,—the slopes of which are clothed with the Flowers Of Possibility, that are now hidden from view, but with the rising of the New Year's Sun, will be revealed in all their glory.

True, a year ago to-day found us standing there, filled with thoughts of the coming days and what would be the memory of some withered flowers may tend to dim the glory of the coming view .- but let us remember only those which retained upon their petals the full bloom of possibilities achieved, and the frangrance of work well done, and if the mind does wander to the leaves of dead hopes, may it be only to make us stronger and more determined for the future.

Feet that before had stumbled from the path of duty, and in seeking to regain it became bruised and sore will mount up with sure and steady tread.-Hands that were torn with the thorns of Doubt and Fear will i pluck nothing but what will strengthen and sustain, and Eyes that were dull despair-with a hitherto unknown gladness within their depths will glimpse the grandeur of the scene, then go onward and upward until they stand upon the highest peak, and looking down on others struggling in the valley below, extend the strong arm and give a word of cheer to keep on striving to attain. Slogging Through.

A friend of mine recently reco to me a very vivid experience. was a flying man during the war, and his job consisted mainly in carrying out night-bombing raids over the enemy lines. He was returning home one night from a long distance raid into Hunland when his machine ran into snowstorm of such severity that he had to crouch low behind his wind screen to avoid being blinded. Both ground and sky were blotted from view, everything was swallowed up in seemed almost as if his machine was driving through a solid wall. He Nut Bowls ... flew blindly on, determining to slog For a quarter of an hour-with his engine thundering and throbbing before him, and his eyes glued on the compass-he kept the nose of his ma chine due west. That was the only thing he could do-fly straight on Then quite suddenly he came out of the snow bank-so suddenly indeed, that the physical relief he experienced actually shocked him. No longer did Desire, and gaze upon the Hill Of the hail lash and heat about him, stinging and torturing his skin. He was through. The stars shone above in a clear sky once more, and he had flown straight. That he knew, for three miles dead ahead were the aerodrome lights. The landing-flares were li and his comrades were sending up

"I flew straight on; it was a case of slogging through or crashing." I like these simple phrases of my flying friend. They seem somehow to come straight from the shoulder. It required nerve and unusual determination to fly that machine blindly through the snow bank, just as in ousiness it requires the courage and a high moral purpose to go aheadand to keep on going ahead-when you cannot even see the road you are treading. Often you come up against difficulties and troubles; sometimes even you stand face, to face with tragedy. If you hesitate, if you don't keep your eyes fixed on the compass, you will lose your way in a fog; your only hope is to keep steadily to your course, to fly straight dim with an hopelessness-born of on with a quiet courage that refuses to own defeat. If you do this you will emerge, and generally with a suddenness that will startle you, from the murk and gloom of the mist into the clear light of day.

The Royal Stores urges with all its strength the necessity of "slogging through". Purpose must be maintained, nerve must not fail, wills nust be rocklike and hearts-true. Then those who try will find-beyoud the dark clouds of depression now enveloping the whole world—the open smiling skies of Better Times. So keep on "slogging through." THE GLEANER.

It was a great pleasure to me to meet one or two of them at a 29th Division Dinner in November to commemorate the grand services of the Division at Cambrai, and one hopes that any officers who may find themselves at home in April or November will make a point of attending the Divisional Dinners which will be held on the 25th of April and the 30th November every year. Apart from the ordinary feelings of good will which
