"For years, I was a martyr to Chronic Constipation. I tried pills, etc., and consulted physicians without relief. Then I began to take 'Fruit-a-tives' and within a few days my bowels were entirely cured me."

VALUABLE ADDITIONS TO READY MADE FARMS

Poultry Expert, a School Teacher and Clergyman Added to Colony

Another poultry expert, a school teacher and a clergyman have recently been added to the colony of English farmers on the "ready-made" farms of the Canadian Pacific Irrigation Colonization company near Strathmore, according to Mr. A. S. Walter, London agent of the company, who accompanied the colonists on their trip out here and returned to England last night.

"The school teacher, Mr. French, is a graduate of Cambridge University and has been conducting a private school," he said, "and the clergyman, Rev. Dr. Evans, is preparing to farm on an extensive scale two miles from Strathmore, in addition to carrying on his ministerial duties. Arrangements are now being made to erect the schoolhouse and church."

"There are twenty-five families on the block of land, and the small farms with their neat buildings all of the same character and so close together and the farms all in the same stage of cultivation give that section of the country a unique appearance. The colonists are not only contented, but enthusiastic. We expect to bring 100 colonists for ready-made farms to Alberta next year."

CAN KEEP MAIDEN NAME

Kansas Women Need Not Lose Identity If Husband Agrees

(From the Philadelphia North American)

In Kansas, if a woman desires, when she is married to a man, she may continue to use her maiden name and he may use his surname and there would be no law that would stop it. Only custom could compel the woman to change her name and accept that of her husband. No less an authority than the Kansas attorney general, Fred S. Jackson, has given out this view in an official opinion.

A young woman was commissioned a notary public and afterward decided to get married. She still wanted to retain her maiden name, and asked the attorney general if it would be necessary to get a new commission and seal after the marriage. The attorney general replied that this was not necessary, and that she could continue to use her old name and pay no attention to that of her husband. Also, if she desired, she could use her maiden surname for all business transactions and use the name of her husband socially.

But as a little extra advice, the attorney general told the young woman that if her powers of persuasion were sufficient, she might prevail upon her spouse to let her name be the better and that he ought to drop his own and take up her name in its stead.

"There is nothing to prevent this," said the attorney general. "The taking of the name of the husband by the wife is wholly a matter of custom and not of law. The husband is the head of the family, and the custom gives him the right to fix the name of the family. If yourself and your husband are not satisfied with either of your surnames, there is nothing except the criticism of the public to prevent you picking out some other name in the dictionary for proper names and take it for your own. When you are married your husband may elect to change his name to yours or he may decide on something else. That becomes the name of the family, and you cannot change it. But there is no law which compels you to accept it. You may retain your own surname and you and your husband may live under different names."

While all things are possible under the Kansas law, and it is also possible for a man to change his name at will, still the attorney general does not think the idea of a woman retaining her maiden name when she is married, in his letter to the woman he says that she would not violate any law if she continued to act as a notary public and use her maiden name after her marriage. Still he believes that she ought to give up the business and attend strictly to her household duties. In some countries it is customary for the husband to assume the name of his wife when they are married or in some States it is required that wife assume the name of the husband for the statutes so constructed and construed as to make the old established custom a law. But in Kansas there is no law on the subject at all, although the courts in granting divorces restore the maiden name when asked for. The attorney general went through all the law books the State owns and he found nothing to prevent a woman retaining her maiden name, or a man changing his name, or a man changing his name to that of his wife, a man changing his name any time, or a woman retaining her maiden name, or a woman changing her name to that of her husband, or a man changing his name after her marriage.

AMERICAN INDUSTRY CAPTURED

It Has Taken Greeks Just Five Years to Control Sponges Fishing in Florida

It has taken but five years for the Greeks from the islands in the Mediterranean sea to capture the sponge-fishing industry of Florida.

In April, 1905, as an experiment, two Greek divers were brought to Tarpon Springs, Fla., the leading market of the world in the fishing in sponges. They were the employees of two or three Greek men of means and education, who had been sizing up the wonderful possibilities of sponge fishing on the Florida west coast.

Diving for sponges proved a great success and within four months four hundred of their Greek countrymen had followed them. In a year a thousand Greeks were making their headquarters at Tarpon Springs, nearly all engaged in sponge fishing and the industry had practically passed into their hands.

Florida is the only state in the Union which has sponge fisheries. The work of taking sponges had been carried on for years, with Tarpon Springs and Key West as the leading depots. In both places the sponges were taken by means of a 3 prong hook fastened to the end of a pole. They poles varied from eighteen to fifty feet in length.

The hook business was at least a slow way to take sponges, but the method went on year after year, a good number of whites and negroes earning a livelihood at the work, little dreaming that other men and other methods were soon to displace them.

Sponges are gathered so much more rapidly by diving that those who use the pole for gathering could not compete with their foreign rivals. A school to learn American sponge fishers diving was established at Tarpon Springs by dealers, but few Americans could withstand the heavy pressure under water, and finally abandoned the business to the Greeks.
