More Jewelry Identified.

Mrs. E. S. Winnett, 580 Dufferin avenue, has recognized one of the rings removed from the house of George Crispin, as her property. It was stolen about two and a half or three years ago. Mr. Andrew Ellis, 28 Prospect avenue, lost a Masonic jewel about the same time, and recognized the one recovered as his property. The thief seems to have confined his operations principally to the northern part of the city. The fruit found knife is sterling silver, and on one side the pearl handle is engraved two heads of wheat with stocks, and on the other side are two designs. This was not noted when the recovery was first published, and may lead to identification.

Tuxedo at the Grand.

Tuxedo at the Grand. George Thatcher's "Tuxed." was produced at the Grand Saturday night before an audience that almost packed the house. The first part of the production was some an autonoce that almost packed the house. The first part of the production was somewhat monotonous and only served the purpose of aflording Mr. Thatcher an excuse to work off a quantity of flippant remarks and rather wearisome jokes. The redeeming features of the show were the vocal capabilities of some of the male preformers and the excellent dancing comedy work of the young Englishman, John A. Coleman. The ladies were pretty but that appeared to be their only stage qualifications. Raymon Moore's singing was exquisite. He has a tenor of very sweet quality and an enunciation delightfully clear. The quartet, Messrs, Moore, Lowis, Frillman and Jose, is one of the best ever heard here. Coleman's dancing and character specialty was something surprising and brought him thundering encores. The company carry their own orchestra.

Rosina Vokes! How many thousand have been delighted and charmed by the music of her voice and amused by the art-lessness of her manner. Here is not the lessness of her manner. Hers is not the art of the photographer nor scene painter, but the watercolor artist, full of light and grace; and for old-time's sake every lover of the best in art will pray that Rosina Vokes may drink deep of the perpetual fountain of youth, so that she may be permitted to show the coming generation, still in pantalets and pinafores, what pure, hightoned comedy is. There is in the name of this jolly little Englishwoman something to make an old heart young; something to revive memories that have long been covered with the duet of time. Miss Vokes, in response to many requests, has arranged revive memories that have long been covered with the dust of time. Miss Vokes, in response to many requests, has arranged to change her programme for to-night's performance, which will commence with Jerome K. Jerome's one-act comedy "Sunset," which is beyond doubt the prettiest piece he has yet written. It introduces Miss Ffolliott Paget in the chief part, an English actress who came here originally with Charles Wyndham, who was leading lady two seasons ago with A. M. Palmer, and starred last season in "The Last Word." The other two pieces of the triple bill will be "The Double Lesson, which has had one previous production here, and in which it may be remembered that Miss Vokes, as the burlesque actress (Miss St. Almond), and Mr. Felix Morris as the Scotch butter (Primer) have two of the most admirable characterizations. The final complete is "My Lord in Livery," in which nearly all the company appear. It is said there are some new accessories in the shape of some new and pretty faces. The above cases were appealed by the stakeholders to the Divisional Court, Toronto, and on Saturday the decision, as stated above, was given and the appeal on all grounds dismissed with costs. Mr. Trebilcock therefore recovers $1,000. This judgment is important, as it practically decides a large number of similar cases. If the appeal had been successful those who had wagered on Carling, but had been ordered by the court here to return the money bet on Hyman, would have also instituted appeals through their stakeholders.

THE RAILWAY RACKET.

Special Meeting of the City Council

Adjourned Owing to the Absence of T. G. Meredith -A Meeting To Be Held To-Day-

Mayor Essery Touches on the L and P. S. R. Bill. The seats reserved for the public in the City Hall were all filled by the time the council met on Saturday night. Those who were present, however, were disappointed, as the railway dispute was not gone into. The following telegram, read by the mayor, explained this: "LAMBTON MILLS, Feb. 4.—Owing to a collision in which, fortunately, the en-gineer was only slightly injured, I have been unavoidably detained and cannot get in until 10 p.m., or later. T. G. Mere-been unavoidably detained and cannot get in until 10 p.m., or later. T. G. MEREDITH."

After reading the telegram the mayor went on to tell the result of the visit of London and Southeastern railway directors to Detroit that day. "We had a conversation of over an hour with the M. C. R. president," he said. "The result was that we were to have an answer from him on Monday next, and that being the case, and our solicitor not being here I would advise the gentlemen to hold the matter over until Monday night."

THE L. AND F. S. R. BILL.

The mayor then touched on the London and Port Stanley Railway Bill.

The anendments desired by the city were objected to by the syndicate, and the general trouble arose over section 12. "This is the section," the mayor explained, "in which the syndicate are asking borrowing powers and in which it is admitted on both sides and by the prominent members of the railway committee that the rent comes in after everything else has been settled for. If we insisted on the amendment the railway committee were afraid that the clause would not go through, and if we objected to the clause altogether the bill could not possibly go through. And then we were informed in that case that the syndicate would in the case that the syndicate would in the syndicate would in the case that the syndicate would in the case that the syndicate would in the s clause altogether the bill could not possibly go through. And then we were informed in that case that the syndicate would throw up the whole business, and this meeting is called to-night to hear the solicitor on the matter. The solicitor has been delayed by a collision and will not be with you; so as the railway committee meets on Wednesday I think that the matter might be laid over until Monday.

Mr. Ivey urged that the meeting be held before Monday night, in order that they might get to Ottawa in time to bring it before the railway committee Wednesday. It was the last week that anything could come before the House and be put through this session.

After some discussion it was decided to
