

No Other Way

BY GORDON HOLMES.

Author of "A Mysterious Disappearance,"
"The House of Silence," Etc.

Mrs. Delamar whispered something when Waverton was speaking, and presumably her communication accounted for the lawyer's next question.

"Did you fail to remember the name of your valet, Rice, when you were brought to Asphodel House after the accident?"

"I really cannot tell you," said Waverton coolly.

"Is the incident already buried in oblivion?"

"It is, if it happened; though I should be slow to believe that I had forgotten Rice's existence, for never was there a more faithful and devoted servant and friend than Rice had been when he was alive."

Traverse looked puzzled, as well he might be, and seemingly disregarded a second suggestion made by Mrs. Delamar. "What doctors have you consulted, Mr. Waverton?" he inquired.

The witness gave the names of three eminent surgeons, and Traverse sat down. Mrs. Delamar was anxious to discuss matters with him at once, but he was emphatic in his refusal to attend then to anything beyond the exigencies of the moment, because a discussion of the way arose between coroner and police as to procedure. Forbes favored an adjournment for another fortnight, and the coroner could not see any valid reason for that course, unless the authorities felt sure of producing further evidence of an important nature.

Forbes could not give a positive undertaking on that score, and Traverse pressed for an immediate verdict of suicide.

It soon became clear, however, that the coroner was opposed to any verdict that positively committed him to a precise finding, and the verdict ultimately took an unprecipitated shape. That the verdict was the effect of poison; but whether by his own act or by the act of some other person or persons there is not sufficient evidence to determine."

This was what is known as an "open" verdict. In other words, it relieved the court from frequent and perhaps useless adjournments, while it left the authorities free to pursue their investigation and take any subsequent steps they might deem necessary by proceedings before a magistrate.

Though Mrs. Delamar might well lay to heart the philosophy underlying the proverb, "Never believe till you are out of the wood," she had some reason to be satisfied with the turn of events. Notwithstanding the disastrous blow struck at her fellow-plotter's matrimonial scheme where Lord Waverton was concerned, she personally had almost escaped from a very serious dilemma. It was quite obvious that had she deviated by a hair's breadth from the facts known to the police, there was in waiting a whole host of evidence to disprove her statements. In that case, not only would the inquiry have been adjourned, but there would be small probability that instead of driving off to apartments in a comfortable hotel, she might now be an inmate of a cell in the police station house.

It was a curiously disquieting thought, and any woman might be pardoned if she dwelt on it to the exclusion of all else. But Mrs. Delamar swept it aside with the first breath of fresh air after she had signed her deposition, had fixed an hour for Traverse to call, and was free to get away from the vitiated atmosphere of the court. In very truth, her soul was wrapped up in a discovery that was almost stupifying. The Claude Waverton she gave testimony at the inquest was not the Claude Waverton she had wheeled from allegiance to his wife and child! It was not a mere matter of differences in voice, gestures, face and manner that perplexed Mrs. Delamar. She had encountered a man whose character differed from that of the Claude Waverton she knew as dawned from dusk, and Mrs. Delamar was a shrewd judge of character.

She was quite certain that she could never have known this later Claude Waverton into her toils, and for that reason she would never have tried to achieve the impossible task. It was inconceivable that a rap on the head could convert a profligate into a man of fine instincts, a rascal into a quiet-mannered gentleman, a brainless fool into an individuality of such strength that it dominated men like the district attorney, the coroner, and those preternaturally alert and sharp-eyed detectives.

Granted even these marvels might be accomplished, they did not account for the undoubted fact that Claude Waverton, the gambler and drunkard, spoke Spanish so badly that he was barely able to stammer through an order to a peon or a transition in a conversation with a "double." Moreover, he himself was aware of this distinction between the linguistic attainments of the one man and the other, and instantly she asked, with growing amazement, why he had dared to emphasize it in public.

Who was he, then? How had he attained such close knowledge of Waverton's history and associates as to step coolly into his shoes? Was he the man supposed to have been killed on the highway road? Was it possible that she could have been mistaken in his identity? She saw now that this astonishing discovery was possible. He had been carried to her house, a limp and pallid form, his face disfigured and his hair matted with congealed blood. Strange doctors and nurses had taken charge of him, and when she was first admitted to the room his head was swathed in bandages and his hair had been cropped closely to permit of the scalp wounds being dressed. She had, moreover, how like he was to the real Claude Waverton!

Mrs. Delamar's next thought was worthy of a woman who had contrived to live on her wits during the last few years. If the present Claude Waverton was an impostor, how could she best turn the discovery to her own advantage? And did she share the secret with any other person? Was there not a good deal of veiled innuendo in the curiously hostile attitude adopted by the district attorney, and why had New York interfered in a New Jersey inquiry? She, in common with most people in court, had wondered why the district attorney had no questions to put to Waverton; but, on the supposition that the authorities were on the same track as herself, it was easy to see that they were only holding their hands now in order to strike with irresistible force later. What they did not know they guessed, and they were waiting until supposition became certainty before they acted.

Then the notion came that she, as an ally, would be of immense value to a man in Waverton's place if called on to fight for the retention of name and estate. She smiled a little at that conception of a new role. Every adventurist must occasionally be candid with herself, whether she is consulting a mirror or her conscience, and Mrs. Delamar frankly admitted that she had grown rather tired of her present life since the day in Palm Beach when he was able to leave his room and calmly announce his intentions—that he meant to go forth with to a hotel, and that she must regard the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars won at Schwarz's gambling house as his farewell token of esteem.

True, she had tried to persuade herself that she would win him back as soon as his health was restored, and she encouraged her ambitions with regard to Doris Waverton as supplying a final cause of estrangement between husband and wife. But there ever had peeped up in her mind a lurking fear lest her plans might miscarry because of some new and unforeseen development in Waverton himself. Now she had learned the suspected genesis of her doubt. Never again would she distrust her intuition.

It was, perhaps, the strangest feature in a strange case that two women, one a charming and modest woman to her finger tips, the other a true daughter of the horse leech, who had willingly bartered her reputation for the doubtful gifts of fashion, should perceive and be swayed by the finer qualities of heart and brain displayed by the present holder of the name of Waverton as compared with his predecessor.

If Mrs. Delamar's suspicions were well founded, she hardly knew the man at all, and had not spoken to him on more than three occasions in her life; yet now she was weighing the chances that would make her legally his wife, insure for her the recognized position she coveted, and confirm for all time an audacious and almost unprecedented fraud.

Seek Owner for Carrier Pigeon

[Special to The Advertiser.]
Duart, Sept. 18.—A fine specimen of the homing pigeon variety flew into the fish-house at the Cleaville station, and was captured by a fisherman. The bird is of a very dark blue color, and bears on the ring attached to its leg, the inscription, "P. C. 379, 1913." Careful search revealed nothing in the shape of a message to make known the owner.

LOST $200,000.

Big Steamship Line Was Swindled by Employment Agency.

[Canadian Press.]
Hamburg, Sept. 18.—The Hamburg-South America Steamship Company has been swindled out of $200,000, according to the officials, by employment agents, who hired stevedores for the company and systematically made returns for a larger number of men than actually worked. Two of the agents have been arrested, and it is said that some of the employees of the company are involved, having acted in collusion with the agents.

To Renew Complexion Without Cosmetics

[From the Dermatologist.]
If the excessive use of cosmetics only knew the impression her artificiality really makes upon others, she would quickly seek means of getting a natural complexion. Let her acquire the mercurized wax habit, discarding make-ups entirely, and she will soon have the kind of complexion that women envy and men admire. It is so easy to get an ounce of mercurized wax at any drug store, use nightly like cold cream, and wash it off mornings. And the results are so remarkable. Gradually the lifeless cuticle peels off, in almost invisible flaky particles. In a week or so there's a new complexion—clear, velvety-soft, of girlish color and texture. The treatment is so simple, harmless and marvellously effective, the wonder is that every woman whose skin is withered, discolored, rough, chapped, freckled or pimply, has not already adopted it.
Let wrinkled women quit pastes and massage creams, which mar the skin still more, and try this more sensible treatment: Dissolve one ounce powdered sassafras in half pint witch hazel; use as a face bath. Every line will quickly disappear.

SUFFERED AWFUL PAINS

For Sixteen Years. Restored
To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Moretown, Vermont.—"I was troubled with pains and irregularities for sixteen years, and was thin, weak and nervous. When I would lie down it would seem as if I was going right down into some dark hole, and the window curtains had faces that would peek out at me, and when I was out of doors it would seem as if something was going to happen. My blood was poor, my circulation was so bad I would be like a dead person at times. I had female weakness badly, my abdomen was sore and I had awful pains.
"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used the Sanative Wash and they certainly did wonders for me. My troubles disappeared and I am able to work hard every day."—Mrs. W. F. SAWYER, River View Farm, Moretown, Vermont.

Another Case.

Gifford, Iowa.—"I was troubled with female weakness, also with displacement. I had very severe and steady headache, also pain in back and was very thin and tired all the time. I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I am cured of these troubles. I cannot praise your medicine too highly."—Mrs. IMA MILLER, Gifford, Iowa.

Mrs. Pankhurst To Sail October 11

[Canadian Press.]
Paris, Sept. 16.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the British militant suffragettes, in a statement here, says that she will "positively sail for America on Oct. 11." She added that she had already booked passage.
"I do not believe the American immigration authorities will detain me, and certainly not for long," she continued. "I am not the least afraid of deportation and will not resort to any subterfuge to gain admission to the country."
"I will sail under my own name and am convinced I will receive fair play. As soon as I finish my lectures in America I shall return to England to resume my work."
