Should the Mother of a Girl of Fifteen Allow Her Daughter to Have Dates?-The Jobless Fiance.

Dear Dorothy Dix-I have daughter 15 years old. She is very large and mature looking for her No one believes that she is under 17

Here is my problem. She wants to go around with the boys and girls of her set, and the boys beg for dates with her. She still has two more years of high school and four years of college ahead of her. Would she six years of school if I let her have much devoted to my father and ten company occasionally or never permit her to? I want to do everything to make her happy, but it breaks my heart to see my baby become a young lady so soon. She confides all of her little secrets to me and I fear that she may grow away from me if I permit her to begin going with

A PERPLEXED MOTHER.

On the contrary, that is your only chance of holding her confidence. If you act the stern parent and deprive her of what she considers the rightful pleasures of her time of life, she will ring down the curtain of silence between you and you will never be able to lift it again or have another peep into her heart. We tell our secrets only to those who will sympathize with us, who will enter into our plans and help us carry them out, and who will see things from our point of view. The reason that daughters so seldom confide in their mothers is because most mothers feel it their duty to take a superior attitude, and criticize and reprove, and generally throw cold water on everything the girl wants to do.

Of course, 15 is young for a giri to start having dates, and that is Parade-Mesdames McDermott, why it is a good thing, when par-Kennedy, Misses Brenner, Drew, ents can manage it, to send a girl away from home to a girls' boarding school, where the boy proposition is more or less eliminated for a year or

The names alienating her from them.

Also, they may be very sure of this, that watch her as they may, she will outwit them, and that if they do not let her have dates openly she will have them on the sly. If they do not let boys come to the house she will meet them on the streets, and that the more they try to keep her away from boys the boy go them during the school week. And if mother makes things pleasont for the boys and girls who come to the house, she can see that the girl asso ciates only with the right kind.

Let a child feel that you are with it, that you are trying to make it happy, and you can lead it almost anywhere; but let it feel that you are against it, that you are trying to thwart it, and you cannot drive it an inch. The iron hand in the velvet glove is for parents' wear in these days. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix-How can persuade my father not to marry woman in whom he is interested? She holds an executive position in an office, is educated and clever, very years younger than he. I think that he should not marry a woman who is employed because she probably has an independent disposition, while he is used to women being dependent.

My father has been wonderful to me and I don't want to lose him. He bought me a house when I married, has just given me a new car and is always doing things for my comfort and pleasure. He has his business, and pleasure. He has his business. One would scarcely go to a blackand golf, and a competent housekeeper to look after him, and my husband and I have dinner at his apartment twice a week, and go to the theatre with him whenever we can do so conveniently. He is always at my beck and call; but, of course, he is not interested in my sort of pleasure, as he is not a society man. Don't you think he might give up getting married to please me? E. M. P.

Answer: Of all the selfish and spoiled children in the world, you are the prize baby. Take the blue ribbon. It belongs to you.

It seems to me that any woman who has a father as you have, one so kind and generous, would want him to do anything in the world that would enhance his happiness. I should think that you would be glad to know that he had found some woman to love and who loved him, and who would give him the com-panionship that he so sadly lacks now.

For according to your own statement you leave him to spend most of his evenings alone, while you are off enjoying yourself with your own Do you never think of that, and that it must be pretty dull and drab to a man work to empty rooms and to a solitary dinner, and to have no company save his own thoughts? Business and golf are well enough in their way, but a man wants something more than that.

Don't try to break off your father's marriage. Give him your blessing. You certainly owe him that for all his goodness to you.
