POETRY.

Work'st thou weary, soon and late ! Think not thine own the worst estate, Nor be thy heart disconsolate.

Lov'st thou in sadness and despair? Deem not thy lot extreme or rare, Nor hope to be exempt from care.

Hast thou the sense of constant pain, . ? From fallen hopes, oft reared in vain! Take courage, friend, and build again.

Is all thy pleasant youth departing, And after years of strife and smarting, Thou art just where thou wast at starting?

Think thou hast gained some wholesome lore, Something thou didst not know before Which may be used in quest of more.

If thou canst not see the light, Take comfort in the gloom of night,

And wreach from darkness some delight. Thou knowest not the face of joy! Bethink thee, he was ever coy,

To show himself to girl or boy, And wouldst thou dream that he will be Content to take pastime with thee,

And deck thy manhood gracefully? Consider all the weary days, Wasted in fruitless, vain delays, To welcome pleasure to thy gaze-

Who never came, who has not come; Whom, should'st thou linger for till-doom. Thou must at last walk lonely home.

Work out thy fale with manly pride, And patiently the and abide.
