At the Princess.

"Is Matrimony a Fallure?" That merry comedy, in three acts, as the play bill rightfully describes it, "Is Matrimony a Failure?" held the boards at the Princess last night and will run all week with matinees tomorrow and Saturday. It has been here before, which probably accounts for the good house last night. Anybody who has seen it wants to see it again. Ontario people will go for the sake of seeing a prominent member of parliament not remotely connected with parliament not remotely connected with northwestern Ontario, in a delightfully funny part. Of couse, it is not he, but James Bradbury, as Frank Bolt, looks so Mke another James as to be thoroly interesting. The cast is distinctly a strong one, and most evenly balanced. Skelton Perry, the successful playwright, is done with easy dash and confidence by Courtney Foote, and his beautiful wife Fanny finds an accomplished exponent in Louise Woods. Sadle Ringler is a clever sketch of an Irish washerwoman, by Josie Morris Sullivan, and over a dozen other characters all add to the success of the acters all add to the success of the piece. The story is well-known and turns on the slightly cynical idea that married people would separate if they got the chance. The Village of Rosedale is thrown into constantion by dale is thrown into consternation by the discovery that most of their wed-dings have been illegally contracted, and the couples rush into freedom. "Good marriages are the result of oad habit," is the sardonic reflection that might be founded on the subsequent return of the faithless couples. The return of the faithless couples. The play is full of bright sayings, which the audience enjoyed to the limit. One interested party in the parquet, when the deserted husband told his motherin-law to remember that the husband was fighting for her daughter's happiness as well as his own, was so engrossed that he ejaculated so that the whole theatre heard him, and laughed as loudly as at anything on the stage—"That's something to think about, oligir!" "Any man that thinks a many and about of a woman is a damn an get ahead of a woman is a damn fool," declares one of the characters, and it might be added that he should

At the Grand.

" Brewster's Millions." For pure, unadulterated fun, flow-ing in a bubbling, sparkling, irresistible stream, let us commend you to "Brew-ster's 'Millions," the offering at the Grand this week. Far from the beaten path of a farce with its tangled network of deception in sex relationships, and its hectic atmosphere, this pure cemedy pursues its plausible way thru fields of unchecked merriment to its goal of rippling laughter. "Monty" ewster is just an ordinary, cleansouled, quick-witted youth, upon whom is laid a unique and tremendous task. Within the space of a year he must dollars in order to win a second one of seven millions. In the view of his pti-millionaire uncle, the dollars of s millionaire grandfather are tainted and must be dissipated to make way for the larger and cleaner bequest. Certain conditions, such as keeping the matter secret, and spending the money legitimately, and yet having nothing to show for it at the end of a year, form the springs of fun from which flow all the funny results. He attacks the problem with resourcefulness, but some of his wildest ventures turn in a profit in place of the loss he has supposed inevitable. His friends, in their well-meant efforts to stop his headlong career of prodigality, balk him at every turn. The girl he wants to marry sadly misunderstands the thousands he cheerfully dispenses as "angel" to an aspiring actress. In the third act he takes all his friends on a yachting cruise, and here is shown an exceedingly realistic scene of a storm at sea. In the last act, when utterly "broke" he awaits his uncle's executor, there are some final farcical obstacles to be overcome before the denouement is permitted to develop. Carl Gerard plays "Monty" Brewster with unaffected naturalness and spontaneity. He resists the temptation to overact and his interpretation has sincerity and an unobtrusive finish. opposite role of "Peggy" is played sweetly and girlishly by Grace Nile. There is a bevy of bright young men around "Monty" and these are adequately played as indeed are the other characters of the play. The Grand was taxed to capacity last night, and the piece will no doubt play to large audiences all week, and escially at the Wednesday and Satur-

At the Star

A burlesque performance of more than average merit is that provided at the Star Theatre this week by I. H. Herk, who presents Edmond Hayes, the original wise guy, in "Society," a sparkling comedietta, and "McGuire rom Slatington," an amusing one-act

Edmond Hayes, as Toronto theatre goers well know, is himself the life and soul of any show, and there is never a dull moment while he is on the stage, with his unique line of dry rapid-fire drolleries, coupled with a seriousness of countenance quite Napleonic, which serves greatly to increase the mirth of the highly appreciative audience. Frank Riley and James J. Collins provide excellent support as character comedians.

Marie Jansen fills the role of prima onna with great acceptance to all, being possessed of both an attractive personality and a melodious voice. The chorus is unusually stunning. and appears in a large number of

"When All Has Been Said." Judging from the repeated tokens of popular appreciation yielded the new comedy drama "When All Has Been Said," its presentation at the Royal Alexandra last night must be pronounced a success. And if the more critical found some weak spots, consideration should be given in that it was the first time the drama has been given on any stage.

The story itself is quite entertaining, The story itself is quite entertaining, and the various types of character introduced serve to interest and amuse from curtain to curtain. The play is a dramatization by Bayard Veiller of Jackson Hoags novel, "That Which Never Died," and is told in four acts. The action takes place in a small town in the middle west, where Billy Gordon, a banker, is running for the mayoralty on a prohibition ticket. The obstacles that are placed in his path form an exciting part of the story, but there is that are placed in his path form an exciting part of the story, but there is also a strongly human domestic flavor that is no less absorbing. How Gordon finally emerges triumphant, and the noble part which "William," his 7-year-old son plays, is better left to the playgoer to see for himself, for the denouements are of that kind which, to anticipate, would only be to weaken. Thru all, the sentiments are of the noblest and best, but there is a plenti-

Thru all, the sentiments are of the noblest and best, but there is a plentiful vein of humor, too, to offset the serious and tense moments.

A capable cast of players interprets the thirteen roles, and of them all. Tommy Tobin, as Wilham Gordon, jr., is perhaps deserving of highest credit for assuming such a heavy share of the work with such popular success. Chas. for assuming such a heavy share of the work with such popular success. Chas. Balsar takes the part of Gordon, the banker, and Emily Stevens that of his wife, and both respond fittingly to the exacting demands.

Jos. M. Sparks is a typical "boss," as Jimmy Hays, saloonkeeper and political leader.

Ray Cox, Roar Provoker. Ray Cox (there's only one of her) is t Shea's this week. Therefore there is a good bill. She has three new stunts, and that old ballgame favorite of hers, and each one is funnier than the other. Mile. Martha is a good deal better to look at than most aerialists, and her act is as good as most, while the Juggling Normans certainly can do wonders with Indian clubs. Cunningham and Marian act funny. The motion pictures are good.

At the Gayety.

"The Dainty Duchess" has a host of admirers in these parts, and she was orded a warm welcome at both performances at the Gayety yesterday. In her train she has a number of especially good burlesque comedians and a bevy of highly presentable and lished chorus girls. "Joe" Morris, the diminutive comedian , with a giant's vocal powers, is the king of the laugh makers. In the opening bur-lesque, "A Sultan for a Day," he hands out a fine line of Hebrew jokes which make good every time. Oscar Lewis as Jonah, fits his part to a nicety. The same can be said of Sam Green, the sultan's bodyguard. Fanny and Kitty Watson evoked generous applause, too. Song hits like the following go a long way toward making the show the success that it is: "It's Moonlight Ail the Time on Broadway." "Hickory Tree, Queen of the Nile." "Nina Will You Go to Carolina?" "Come Along My Mandy." The olio is one of the best seen in Toronto this season. The Watson sisters in "The Terpsichorean Fashion Plates," have an act that is seldom duplicated. Lewis and Green have something original in "Engaging a Cook," and Margie Hid-ton shows that she really is the "Ideal Girl." The Baker-Devoie trio have something new in tumbling.

At the Majestic

This week's show at the Majestic is exceptionally well balanced and of a character thruout, and the six splendid turns provide one of its best all round vaudeville bills of the season. Musical Walters are headliners. with a number of novel effects on various instruments, and great versatility is displayed by this team. Carley Carlas exhibits some Russian dances which are new and decidedly graceful; Harris and Wilson provide some funny work in the way of coon comedy dialog, and another good bit of dialog is produced by Martin and Lee; the feminine member of the latter team being a skilful
