

INTERIORS OF GREAT BRITAIN'S FAMOUS LEGISLATIVE HALLS—THE HOUSE OF COMMONS AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

The House of Commons' Chamber is the same width and height as the House of Lords' Chamber. The speaker's chair is built of elegantly carved oak and all throat the chamber is magnificently furnished. Overlooking the floor are the peers', ladies', speaker's and public galleries. Portraits of the Right Hon. David Lloyd-George, who introduced the budget in the House of Commons and the Right Hon. Herbert Asquith, Premier of Great Britain, who challenges the right of the House of Lords to reject the budget, are shown on right and left of speaker's chair.

Another Mansfield Story.
To Richard Mansfield an enthusiastic woman admirer had paid tribute of praise, adding, "I suppose, sir, that when in the spirit of those great roles you forget your real self for days."
"Yes, madam," for days, as well as nights. It is then I do those dreadful things—trample on the upturned features of my leading lady and hurl tender looks at waiters.
"And you do not know of it at all?"
"Not a solitary thing, madam, until I read the papers the next day."

How to Win a Job.

Prof. W. G. Bowdoin, author of "Book Plates" and other special art volumes, did not always enjoy the success he now has. He tells a merry incident in connection with his first magazine appointment.
"It was this way," he said, "I tried to get on the staff as art editor, critic and contributor, but neither owner nor editor took much notice of me. One day I got my dander up. I went into the office, saw an empty desk, and ordered the office-boy to clean it for me. I dictated to the stenographer nearly all day. The rest of the staff listened and seemed interested. The next day they appeared to me for orders. I gave them. The editor sent me out on the third day for an art essay. Near the end of the week the owner happened in.
"Say, Bowdoin, how do you like your job?" said he, with a twinkle in his eye.
"First class," I replied, "all but the salary."
"Don't worry about that," he answered. "I'll give you the same as the last man we had."
"And he did."

A Young American.

A certain Canadian author visited Baltimore not long ago. At a dinner in Baltimore he said, "The spirit of business enterprise and speculation is what interests me most profoundly in America. For instance, I was riding one day on the outskirts of Washington and at a certain place I dismounted and got a little boy to hold my horse. I was gone about ten minutes, and on my return I found the first boy gone and another smaller one—standing at the horse's head.
"How is this?" I said. "You are not the boy I left my horse with."
"No, sir," said the tiny urchin. "I speckled and bought the job off the other fellow for a dime."
"Or worse, after that," the author ended. "It was impossible for me to 'beat' the market."
