umbrella may come in service then?" I escaped from him then, as I had reached the street I wanted to get out at; and leaving the omnibus, I elevated the umbrella to protect me from a pouring rain. At the corner, under a shop awning, stood two lovely damsels, evidently waiting for the rain to cease, for they were without umbrellas. Over-sensitive in regard to my appearance, I could not help noticing the titter as they regarded me. And, to tell the truth, there was somewhat of a contrast to laugh at. Imagine a fashionably-dressed young man, rather good-looking, decidedly genteel, and over his head an enormous old cotton umbrella, and you'll see me as those girls saw me then.

I was nettled, put out, and wrathful, but resolved to check their mirth at all hazards. Stepping up to them, I said, "Ladies, my umbrella is large, and as I young fellow. If I was astounded, they see you are without one, can I offer you my services as far as I go?" mentally resolving, that if they went further than I, my umbrella should go too.

After. whispering for a moment, one of them replied, "Thank you sir; we would be obliged for your escort." Of course, as we went along I did my best to open a conversation, and soon had the pleasure of eliciting a few words from them. They were both very pretty; but the one called Mary, I thought then, was a particularly pleasant young lady, and instinctively deaired to prolong our walk, that we might be better acquainted. Having reached the street in which I
