DIGGING UP THE ROMAN FORUM; MANY RELICS FOUND

ROME, March 8.—The Roman Forum used to be spoken of as the battlefield of Time and the charnel house of the nations and a camp of ruins and an antique storehouse. All of these titles are justified by what the Forum presents today; but there are many other sites both in Rome and the land around it to which similar descriptions may well be applied.
The workmen digging for a drain or sewer in the Via Ludovico Muratori a short time ago brought to light two great blocks of marble columns—one of that dusky-hued marble known as "Africano," and the other of that Egyptian marble known as "Pavonazzetto," with the hue of dotted blood in a dark brownish ground. These evidently belonged to some rich Roman residence of the days of the Republic.
Fragments of epitaphs and of honorary inscriptions are numerous and met with in all sorts of places. In the area between the Via Venti Settembre and the Via Delfo there were found some remains of construction in squared masses of tuff, belonging in all probability to sculptural monuments which bordered the highway that left Rome by the Porta Collina. These are nameless monuments, but their bulk and style proclaim that the persons for whom they were built were of importance in their day.
A better fortune has accompanied that member of an ancient Roman family whose funeral inscription is engraved on stone and found in the Piazza del Pianto makes it evident that he belonged to the noble family of the Aedil Lami.
The ever enduring character of Roman roads may be deduced from the condition of a portion of an ancient road discovered to a considerable depth below the present level of the Via Monte Brianzo.
Roads for centuries and constructed in all probability prior to the Christian era ran close to the Tiber bank, and it was making an excavation near the embankment of the river that this long lost road was brought to light.
A portion of another ancient street was discovered in the Via Galvani and beneath it a portion of the leaden pipes that ran under the street. These are frequently found in the ruins of villas and ancient dwellings and as they bear names on them they frequently locate the residences of the great ones of the Empire.
Thus it is mostly the ruins of tombs or material belongings to graves that are revealed by the spade of the workmen. Remnants of street are naturally more rare. Monuments of a religious character—generally deduced from the inscriptions found on them—are occasionally found. An interesting specimen of this class of inscription was found on a marble architrave nicely carved. The votive inscription was to the demigod Hercules and it was offered by a certain P. ELLIUS HIERO, freedman of the time of Antioch Emperors—the second century—who filled the offices of chamberlain introducing the guests and the visitors into the imperial palace. This interesting record of a dignified court official of eighteen centuries ago was found at the farm of Tor Maandria, seventeen miles from Rome, on the Via Salaria, amongst a series of walls and ruins that at one time evidently formed a rich suburban residence. This conjecture, founded on the character and extent of the walls is confirmed by the discovery there of the floor of an apartment formed of mosaic.

When one goes out from the city of Rome into the campagna, or country, which surrounds the city and looks upon the grass covered hills or the barren tufts waiting he requires the imagination to picture houses and temples standing here. And yet you have but to remove the earth a little and you find the remains of a once vigorous life lying before your eyes.

NEW YORK MINISTER THRUST IN PRISON.

Rev. D. Van Slyke Roughly Used in Venezuela—American Engineer Shot.

KINGSTON, N. Y., March 8.—The Rev. Dr. J. G. Van Slyke, pastor of the First Reformed church of Kingston, returned home today from an extended southern trip, during which he was arrested in Caracas, Venezuela, because of his profession. His arrest, Dr. Van Slyke says, was made soon after his arrival in Caracas, and he was taken to one of the city prisons. Upon demanding to know what charge was preferred against him, he was told that the Venezuelan laws prohibited foreign clergymen of any denomination entering the country and that he had disobeyed this law.
Through the efforts of the American consul Dr. Van Slyke was released upon promising not to perform any religious duties for seven days, at the end of which time he must leave the country. He was not released during the remainder of his stay, he declared, and received many courtesies at the hands of Americans and Venezuelans.
J. Wallace Caldwell, an American mining engineer, who had reached Caracas about the same time, was arrested at the same time by mistake for Van Slyke, but was released when Dr. Van Slyke has been released. Dr. Van Slyke has been charged by order of President Castro on a charge of being implicated in a revolutionary plot.

GIRL POSES AS BOY AND ROBS EMPLOYER

Started on Her Novel Career of Crime by Her Mother's Scheme.

LONDON, March 8.—A remarkable story of a girl who was induced by her mother to masquerade as an boy in order to rob her employer, was told at the Liverpool police court yesterday.
Emily Marras, an intelligent girl of 15, said that after conversation with her mother she dressed up as a boy some months ago and obtained work running errands.
A few weeks ago she obtained employment under the name of "Harold Barnes" in the shop of Mr. Jacobus. Noticing where the money was kept, she hid one night in the cellar. On the early hours of the following morning she broke open the till with an axe and stole $20, subsequently giving the money to her mother.
Suspicion, however, fell upon the supposed boy, and she was charged at the police court without her real sex being discovered.
It was only when reminded to the work house that she confessed to being a girl.
The mother was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for receiving the money, and the girl was remanded for seven days.

FELL FROM THE ROOF ON TO A PICKET FENCE

ST. STEPHEN, N. B., March 8.—A terrible accident happened in Calais this afternoon. William Franks was on the roof of his house removing snow, when he slipped and went over the edge, alighting on a picket fence. One picket penetrated an eye, another fractured his jaw bone, and another dislocated his shoulder. At this time he is still alive, though his chances for recovery are not promising.

HERETICAL DR. CRAPSEY GONE, CHURCH IS DYING
Sermon by Bishop Attracts 60—Previously Grows Packed Edifice.
ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 8.—Since the withdrawal of the Rev. A. S. Crapsey from the rectory of St. Andrew's Church, at Batavia, in November, following his trial for heresy, the life of the church has been declining and the attendance and interest of the congregation has been steadily decreasing. Only eight persons patronized the communion the small congregation was in pathetic contrast to the swelling numbers that crowded the church to the very doors to hear Dr. Crapsey's closing sermon.
It was Dr. Crapsey's wish that his former parishioners should remain loyal to the church and continue to worship there, and the vestry has been trying to follow his wishes so far as it has been unable to secure a pastor.

James Massey, an article seaman on the steamer Montreal, was given in charge yesterday afternoon by Capt. J. H. McKel, who charged him with attending himself without leave.
