

At Leland Stanford University "Falc." attempted to finish his Arts, but the earthquake decided otherwise, and the following year found him at McGill with Med. '10. After one year he was compelled on account of ill-health to drop out for a session and took his second year with Med. '11. Here he has held office after office, becoming President of the third year and later President of the Medical Society and member of the Students' Council.

In the Medical Society, President Falconer, by his splendid diplomacy, maintains peace between the various factions and fractions which go to make up the six classes in Medicine. As a speaker his efforts are little less than Ciceronian, and it is his talent in this direction, which he displayed to such advantage at the Medical Dinner, which makes his friends prophecy a brilliant political career. Falc., however, would sooner be Dean of Medicine than President of the U.S.A., but with these or whatever other great things the fates have in store for him, he has our good wishes.
