Is this sturdy honesty of the farmer a substantial reality or a myth——"the golden fabric of a vision?"

It might not do to admit that there is just as much rascallty and deeprooted chicanery amongst the honest farmers as there is in the dishonest traders, in proportion to the extent of their operations—for that would be admitting the principle that opportunity makes rogues of us all, but when one for a moment summarises the offenses against commercial morality recorded against the honest farmer, one cannot gains y that he displays a tolerable degree of enterprise and clasticity of conscience.
