The local skaters, who were all quite youthful, then quickened their pace as if to show that they had been re-serving their powers, and the result was that the last mile was made in magnificent time. Robert A. Elliott came dashing in first with Stewart so close at his heels that it looked like a tie. Mr. Paulsen surveyed the skaterwith some curiosity as they redoubled their speed toward the close of the race. There was a nice spirit of fairness shown among the spectators, who cheered the European even more lustily than they did our own skaters, while he remained in the race and came to the front at all. It has been said that Mr. Paulsen lost the race because of having to turn corners so frequently, he being accustomed to skate straight away on an open river. With every courtesy to a stranger it would be impossible to agree with this. People are said to live faster altogether in the new world.
