Detective Killed

And two others dying following raid in New York. Woman supposed killed by crook who suicides.

New York, Nov. 29.—The body of Henry Vogel, described by the police as an international crook, and beside it the body of his girl, Lottie, lay in the morgue to-day, whilst in uptown hospitals one dead detective and four other men were stretched out, hovering between life and death, unable to give a connected account of how they were shot in a raid in Vogel's rooms where he was sought as a diamond thief.

In the fusillade which followed the entrance of the detectives, Vogel and the woman were killed instantly. Accounts vary as to whether he shot his companion and committed suicide or whether they fell before the fusillade from the officers.

John Allen, a detective, died this morning. Of the wounded hope was expressed to-day for the recovery of two, Luigi Gerardi, a private detective and Wm. Butler, a waiter. The other two were shot in the abdomen and little hope was held out. They are Martin S. Fay, a city detective, and Louis Mordseheim, proprietor of the hotel where the battle occurred.

The police have in their possession to-day two steamer trunks, a valise, a dress suit case, a hand bag and a steamer bag which, when opened, are expected to reveal the secret, if not the loot, of many big robberies, and may lead to arrests in other cities. The trailing of the pair yesterday which resulted in the fatal shooting followed directly the arrest of a dishonest servant girl. She is Sophie Beckendorf, a girl of eighteen, who broke down in the Tombs yesterday and confessed to several robberies and implicated Vogel as the "fence" for servant girls who made it their practice to answer advertisements accept positions with the sole idea of robbery.

She told the police of Vogel's whereabouts and within an hour he had been trailed to the hotel where the fight occurred.

Mordseheim, the proprietor, had ordered William Butler, a waiter, to show the detectives to the Vogel's room on the 4th floor.

A woman's voice asked what they wanted as they knocked. A moment later Vogel opened the door, and as Allen forced his way in, declaring that the couple were under arrest, Vogel struck the detective over the head with a black-jack, and then grabbed a magazine revolver which lay upon the bed. His first bullet struck Allen in the right side of the head and he fell across the bed.

Detectives Fay and Cerade hurriedly threw themselves into the room, followed by Mordseheim and Butler. It is declared that they did not fire a shot, but expected to grab Allen's assassin. They were not quick enough. Vogel let go one shot after another, almost every one taking effect. Fay and Mordseheim received wounds in the abdomen. Gerade was shot in the leg and back, and Butler received a bad wound in the hip. The woman, also armed, had fired several shots, and probably helped to shoot down the detectives.

Evidently crazed at his gun work, Vogel is believed to have turned his gun upon his young woman companion. She was shot through the abdomen and soon expired. Vogel made quick work of himself by putting the last bullet from his gun into his own head and fell dead.

On Second Thought.

In town they say of a girl that she is a debutante. In the country they say she has begun to "set up" with the men.

The trouble with the man who is defending Old Nero is that he is not in position to do the deceased much good.

One of the finest things about the happy home life is the occasional period when there are no guests to entertain.

Mrs. Tug Watts, who is a very modest woman, always refers to a bull as a "male animal." What is there that is immodest about calling a bull a bull?

Do not lament the fact that you are not chivalrous. If you follow the telegraph news closely you will perceive that the chivalrous man nearly always is shot and killed.
