of Bay of Islands in having to walk five or six miles in-country to secure a deer! It appears that "a man wants a caribou or two for his wife and family for the winter"! We beg to remind our contemporary that the right, or privilege, of killing these fine animals belongs as much to any man in the Island as to the "sportsman" of Bay of Islands, and that there are many who would be content to walk five or six miles, or even further, to secure a head. It is hard to say whether the selfishness of the article or the idea that the proper function of the caribou is to supply food and sustenance is the more to be remarked. It is introduced by some sarcastic references to "British freedom" and "British fair play," catch-words that are frequently made use of in some such connection. The present instance may serve to show the peculfar ideas some people form of the things the words stand for.

We think there will be general agreement with the letter from "Conser-vation" which we publish Islands, all of which have apparently proclaimed their allegiance to the provisional government under Venizelos. A rather disquieting circumstance that is beginning to receive notice is the strong establishment of the Italians in Albania. They have a strong force there, which will probably be there at the cessation of hostilities. Albania is not likely to remain the no-man's land it has been, and in the settlement after the war there may be some conflict between the contending claims of Italy, Serbia If the message is correct and the situation at Athens indeed serious, the Allies should be able the contending claims of Italy, Serbia and Greece. If so, it is not likely that Greece will get much sympathy, what ever part she may play henceforth. In fact, it is likely enough that much diplomacy will be needed if the end of the war is not to see the irritation and by no means unanimous on the subject of Greece and the value of en-treating her well, and they seem now to be content to welcome such of the Greeks as will join Venizelos and to Greeks as will join Venizelos and to render the rest incapable of mischief. The conduct of the Royalist mob at Athens reminds us strongly of the self-timportance of the Lilliputians. Yet the weeping Constantine is an affectimportance of the Lilliputians. Yet the weeping Constantine is an affecting sight, and who can conjure up un- amicably dispose them to one and a picture of the loyal tars comier. Italy aims at, and is by mai considered to deserve, control of the Adriatic, and this should not be ining to him with bleeding hearts and streaming eyes? We could almost shed our tears in sympathy, if we did not consistent with allowing Serbia a outlet thereto. Probably affairs in Greece will be allowed to run their know that when the war has followed its course far enough to put the issue beyond all doubt even to the pigheaded Constantine, these same patriots will be the first to turn upon him and denounce him. By which time, however, it is safe to assume that they will have only his life-sized portrait on which to wreak their vengeance.

The position of Greece grows more peculiar every day and her ultimate fate more difficult to conjecture. It is a little unfortunate that the recent set-backs of Roumania have given the appearance of truth and prevision to Constantine's warnings. But Roumania is not yet finished, and there are signs that the tables may soon be its course far enough to put the issue are signs that the tables may soon be turned. If they are, it will be inter-esting to watch Athens once more. The difficulty one is under in passing judgment on Greece is in the clear division that has separated her into two camps, and the contempt that might naturally be felt for the King

Naples Overjoyed at Peace Miracle.

Naples, Italy, Sept. 19.-All the pells in the city rang out joyfully today, sirens blew and flags flew from shipping in harbor and bay, cannons fired a salute and Naples went mad with delight over an omen which is construed as foretelling an early ending of the war and the returning home f her victorious sons.

This is the day of St. Januarius (Gennaro), the patron saint of Naples Every year at this time the people cok for a miracle—the bibling and iquifying of the saint's blood preing the great cathedral was packed. Many of the faithful had spent the night on the bare stone floors in order to be near the altar when the vials are exposed.

At 10 o'clock the ceremony began. Descendants of the saint, simple fisher folk, had the post of honor near the altar When the vials were brought forth from the chapel and the reiquary containing the 'saint's head was exhibited, all the worshippers prostrated themselves, beat their neads upon the floor and rent the air with cries and invocations, the des endants chanting their special lit
