LADY IRIS' MISTAKE;

Hero of 'Surata'

CHAPTER XXI

"Why not?" asked the captain. "She would not like it, I am sure. It would seem like a want of trust on your part—as though you did not quite believe her when she expressed sympathy. If I were in your place, I should say nothing about it—not one word until she does."

"I do not care which way it is," said Allan, "so long as there is neither disguise nor deceit."

Then he rode off, for it was past midday, and he had promised to dine at Chandos, where there was to be a small dancing-party in the evening.

Lady Avico, who had overheard a part of the conversation, came up to her husband.

"How are matters progressing in that quarter, John?" she asked. "Better than I expected," he answered, sullenly.

"Well, surely that pleases you!" said his wife. "You wanted your revenge, and it seems to me that you will have it."

"I wish I were dead!" muttered John Bardon.

"I think you ought to have more sense!" cried his wife.

"My dear Avico," he replied, "you are a very good woman, but there are things that you do not understand."

"That is quite possible," said Lady Avico, calmly; "but I know how to distinguish common sense from nonsense; and you are talking nonsense—nothing else. Tell me how the affair progresses."

"I am sure she likes him," declared her husband, savagely. "I—I know she would."

CRAMPS

Miss Marie Rasmussen of Nordland, Kristiansund, Norway, writes as follows:

"I sometimes suffer terrible pain from cramps in the hands and feet, and have found nothing that gives me more relief than Sloan's Liniment. It is certainly a wonderful preparation."

Every day brings added testimony praising the world-famed "pain's enemy."

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

though it will almost break her heart to do so; and he will go."

"Yes, he will go," said John Bardon; "and I shall feel like a villain for the rest of my life. Still I shall have had my revenge, my just and righteous revenge."

CHAPTER XXII

Five weeks had passed, and Captain Osburn, who had had his leave renewed, began to think that his visit to Hyne Court had been long enough, although, whenever he hinted at taking his departure, John Bardon refused to hear of it.

"You must not speak of going yet," he said. "You promised me a long visit."

"It has been unconscionably long, I am afraid," replied Captain Osburn; "but to me it has been such a period of utter happiness that the days have glided by like moments. Still the time approaches when I must go."

"It must not be yet," laughed his host. "What's that song my wife is forever singing?—If we must part, why should it be now?"

"Lady Avico would think you wanting in respect if she heard you," laughed Allan. "That is one of the finest love songs we have, and you quote it in that irreverent fashion! I will remain a few days longer, with many thanks to you for your boundless hospitality, John. I shall never be able to repay you; and, to tell you the truth, I do not want to go. What can Lady Avico think of my long visit?"

"She is the more pleased the longer it lasts," replied John Bardon, and he was smitten with shame that he should so betray his friend.

"I have been at Hyne Court nearly six weeks," he said, "and I am more unwilling than to leave the neighborhood; I find it so pleasant."

"I hope," returned the earl, "that before you go you will spend a few days at Chandos. I shall be delighted to have you with us."

He could not help seeing how the young soldier's face brightened, and how for some little time he was quite unable to answer him.
