BERLIN, Oct. 15.—A suicide occurred yesterday in the crowded Thiergarten. A dissipated youth, who had taken five beerg garden waitresses out for a drive in a carriage, gave each of them three marks for a kiss on arriving at the Thiergarden, alighted, and telling the coachman to take the girls home, drew a pistol as his companions were waving their adieux, and shot himself dead. A paper was found pinned inside his coat, bearing the following inscription: "Max Hildebrandt, Berlin. Having spent my fortune, this is the best end."

A Drankard's Faithful Dog

A Drankard's Faithful Dog.

He was a retail boot and shoe merchant on one of Montreal's principal streets. He was a practical man; commenced a small business with a very limited capital; but he possessed something, very often of greater value than a bank account; he was industrious and pushing. When he first opened up many predicted his early downfall and failure. His industry, hard work and constant application, however, worked out for him success in two years. Thus solidly established, he worked on early and late, overcoming difficulties and building up a large trade, which yielded handsome returns.

Five years of unprecedented success seemed Five years of unprecedented success seemed to nerve him with renewed energy; he worked harder than ever before, but unmindful of the results. Nature was being trampled on, and at once her righteous and infallible laws demanded satisfaction. The merchant had grown careless and indifferent, and only succumbed when the hand of disease bore on him heavily. He overworked both brain and body, and was left an almost helpless wreck. He became nervous, sleepless, irritable and dyspeptic, and so weak and broken down that he was unable to walk across his room.

so weak and broken down that he was unable to walk across his room.

A faithful and wise wife, after a few visits of the family physician had been made without any good results, calmly and affectionately informed her husband that she would assume the responsibilities of doctor and nurse upon one condition, which was, that Paine's Celery Compound must be used instead of powders, pills and drugs. No word of remonstrance was uttered, the merchant having too much confidence in his wife's wisdom. Paine's Celery Compound was used, which, with proper disting and good nursing, restored him in a short time to his usual good health and strength.

short time to his usual good health and strength.

His friends were astonished beyond measure with his rapid and perfect cure, and, of course, talked considerably about the matter to friends, many of whom are warm supporters of Paine's Celery Compound to-day. This is by no means an Jeolated case in the city of Montreal. There are hundreds of others who could tell of similar cures effected by this wonderful Compound.
