"I don't quite see what ground you have for objecting to-Mr. Forbes' words, Mr. Waverton," said the coroner.

"Thank you," said the lawyer hastily, but Waverton would not allow him to continue Mrs. Delsmar's examination as continue Mrs. Delsmar's examination as continue were settled in his favor.

"In fact," went on the dry legal voice merellessly, "a little while prior to your hyshard's death you had figured as co-transaction?"

Mis. Delamar, in her turn, had been vouchsafed a breathing spell. She had to elect instantly whether she would admit that the Mrs. Kyrle little known and seldom seen at Absecon was none other than the notorious Mrs. Delamar, or strive to retain the disguise that had protected her so effectually in the past. Yet, had she really any choice in the matter? Had not these wretched detectives unearthed her past and dared she risk the destruction really any choice in the matter? Had not these wretched detectives unearthed her past, and dared she risk the destruction of a credibility thus far established by denying a double existence so capable of incontestable proof? The lawyer had contrived to place the onus of decision on her shoulders, since he did not even appear to assume that she was the tenant of the house at Palm Beach. Her face blanched to a more sorrowful wanness, but she did not falter.

"Yes," she said, "it was I who lived in Asphodel House. Mr. Claude G. Waverton was my guest during March and April, and I sent him to buy the crystals of nicotine. I am at a loss to understand why he should deny the fact, or why Jose Vuilmo should withdraw his first emphatic recognition of Mr. Waverton. I am quite aware that Mr. Waverton is suffering from the effects of an accident, but—"
"Let us keep to the thread of the story," said Forbes hastily. "You have been remarkably candid—"

"The district attorney asked my client—
I quote his very words—if she could throw light on Jose Vullmo's testimony. I think the ought to be allowed to state her imshe ought to be allowed to state her impressions fully."
"Impressions are not evidence," growl-

"Exactly; but why take one part of my client's views and reject another?"
"Very well!" snapped Forbes, though his rival fancied that this alacrity to yield the point suggested a trap. "What were you about to say, Mrs. Kyrle?"
"Only this," was the meek response. "If Mr. Waverton's memory is affected, he cannot be positive that it was not he who went to Vuilmo's store. Moreover, Vuilmo did not recognize him, and I am quite sure he executed my commission."

Certainly here was a hard nut for Wa-
