THE "CHESTNIT" CHARGE.

Our evening contemporary takes the defact of Mr. McImoyl eith very bad grace, especially so, perhaps, on account of the Opposition having come to the conclusion before election day that their candidate would be returned by a large majority. This would have enabled them to have trotted out the off-repeated phrase of "the handwriting on the wall," etc. Having sustained defeat, it becomes necessary to offer an excuse, and our evening friend brings out the equally stale charge of books. The intelligent have made the threshold brings out the equally stale charge of books. The intelligent have not become the conclusion of the start of the processing to the Times, by "most brazen corruption—corruption that was indiscriminate, to general and personal." The public, however, have become so familiar with the regards of our contemporary that little credence will be placed, he array of abaurd charges which are made in its article of last even ing. THE PAPAL RESCRIPT.

In a recent article the London Time says: Slowly and reluctantly, but never heless decisively, the Roman Catholis hierarchy in Ireland have bowed the head before the decree of the Vistian. The resolutions adopted by the archibialoga and bishops, not including Dr. Walsh, who met in conference at Clondiffe, clearly, is grithin the aphreof faith and morals is final. and the resolution to discountenance the language of mutinous invective which has been freely used by the professional politicians of the national league. It is not probable, since the question has been placed on this basis, that the Pope will rest satisfied with a formal and perfunctory acquiescence on the part of the Irish clergy in the decree.

Mrs. Fowler met Mr. Gardiner on the street and on his inquiring about the girls tord of the Admiralty to be in earnest on Monday night when he so lightly disposed of the possibility of invasion by stating the amount of steam tonage which the operation would require. He observes that the ideas of Napoleon and of the people of England in his time, also of the Danes, the Saxons, Julius Cæsar, and William the Conqueror, were evidently widely at variance with those of the First Lord on the subject of transporting armies across the Channel. Coming to a more recent example, Sir Edward Hamiley points to our successful invasion of the Crimea, and says that on the ground asaumed by Lord George Hamilton the landing of the allied army in the Crimea was an impossible undertaking. When Abercrombie's troops approached the shore in Aboukir Bay, they entered a tremendous zone of fire from the French field-guns, which sank many of their boats. But now that every warship is an impregnable fort, and carries guns of irresistable power, an area of coast is kept absolutely clear for the landing. And as the first troops landed can either remain within that area or begin the advance, the same transports which conveyed them would be free to return and bring over the rest. The whole company rose up, five revolvers glistening on Cooney.

The fire, which had been kept up in a bright blaze, illuminated the whole scene.

Cooney raised himself, his hands hanging by his side; he knew that the least movement would send five bullets through him.

"Now, Cooney," said the captain, "no more lying; you have betrayed us and you are now on an errund of treachery. Hold up your hands!"
Coney held up his hands.
"Boys," added the captain, "cover him with your barrels while I tie him."
The captain went to his saddle and up-

As the captain stepped toward Cooney, the latter, quick as a flash, drew his pistol on him, and at it its report the captain sank to the ground with a yell, Cooney's bullet crashing through his head.

Before Cooney could move his hand

Before Cooney could move his hand from its aim he was covered by the pistols of the remaining four men, and he fell, pierced by four bullets, on the corpse of the captain.

The four freebooters did not remain to dispose of the bodies, nor even to look at them, but searching for their hobbled horses they saddled them at double quick. Leading the two horses of the dead men they struck through the prairie toward the Rio Grande.

A faint streak of light was barely tingeing the horizon when a troop of Rangers could be seen silently surrounding the timber which contained the Wells. Each rider was bending on his saddle, rifle in hand, watching for those they were pursuing. However, daylight came clear and stroom for but one man upon each.

Man's Dress in San Francisco.

The genuine "down east" or Canadian visitor who arrives in San Francisco during the winter season greatly helps to increase the diversity in dress which one notes in San Francisco. He often comes equipped in fur lined raiment, and when the clouds grow heavy and the wind begins to come in puffs from the south he looms up like a survivor of an Arctic expedition. His ponderous coat with its fur collar enveloping his ears looks strange beside the light summer overcoats or the still thinner cutaway coats made light and airy by white neckties and plug hats. The newly arrived owner of the fur lined overcoat, however, rarely sticks long to overcoat, however, rarely sticks long to his old love, and is soon found airing his figure without any overcoat at all or stalking along with a gossamer garment thrown back to display his light necktie and other summery raiment.

The Visitor from the Orient, if he be of The Visitor from the Orient, if he be of a foppish turn, contributes more than his share toward the contrasts in dress. He is generally of a "horsey" turn and delights to stroll through the streets on his way to a livery stable remarkable in a hunting suit, tight fitting "cords" and top boots and spurs. An Oriental tourist who struck the town not long since, sailed out from the Palace hotel one chilly afternoon in a pair of canary colored pansatisfied out from the Palace note; one chilip afternoon in a pair of canary colored pantaloons, patent leather shoes with striped cloth tops, a blue vest with polka dots and a claret colored velvet coat. The whole rig was surmounted by a pith helmet of the kind worn in tropical countries. The gamins of San Francisco are too much accustomed to sharp contrasts in dress to accustomed to sharp contrasts in dress t accusoment to sharp contrasts in dress to be easily excited, but this Shanghai fash-ion plate was too much for their equa-nimity. By the time they had presented their compliments in the shape of a wheel-barrow full of cobble stones, the Shanghai masher reached his hotel through a doze pack streets and was seen no more in a velvet coat on a cold winter's day.—San
