

HER BAKERY.

Fair Phyllis baked a dainty cake To please her father's palate, Her parent put it on a stake And used it for a mallet.

She then devised a loaf of bread, Her father flew to thank her, He turned it over in his head (I do not mean the loaf of bread) And—used it for an anchor.

SPRING, GENTLE SPRING.-Mama, come and get me some of those nice Boots we saw at West's, on Yonge Street.

It is absurd to talk about what might have been done to help General Gordon, but it is evident that Wolseley deserves censure for being so obstinate as to disregard the advice of the numerous Canadian editors who were desirous of helping him. His best course in the Soudan business was as clearly indicated in the editorial columns of papers with over 100 subscribers each as it could be, and if he had only paid attention to the able articles so generously written by members of the rural press throughout the length and breadth of Canada for his guidance—he would have been killed long ago.
