

There would seem, therefore, a case for supporting the gradualist approach in the context of such reforms as that of the European aviation industry but equally, gradualism is no panacea for the frictions and problems which are inevitably going to arise as deregulation progresses.