The Toronto Sunday World. "I get more reading out of the Sunday World than out of any other two papers in the country," said a book manager one day last week, and, judging from the rush there is after the paper every Saturday night, he is probably not far from the mark.

The opinion of thousands of readers of the paper that will be published at 9 o'clock to-night will confirm the general reader, as well as the man who hangs after news. In Rodney Stone, the tenth installment of his great story, Conan Doyle brings us to the verge of the great fight that he has so long been building up to.
