THE CANADIAN MUSKRAT.

USKRAT IS THE most extensively used fur produced. The annual collection fluctuates around five million pelts. The best variety comes from North America and particularly from Canada.

The size is generally 8x10 inches; the overhair is coarse and light brown in color, the fur fine, thick and silky. When alive the animal emits a faint odor of musk from which it derives its name. This is, however, entirely eliminated in the treating of the pelts.

The Muskrat fur is used almost exusively ining of capes, ulsters, jackets l coats. Also ian fashions have introduced jackets for ladies made outside entirely of this fur.

We use superior Muskrat in the lining of our coats for gentlemen. Special attention is called to our beaver cloth overcoats, which have wide collars and lapels of otter and are lined with selected Muskrat.

Difficulties of Publication. Publication was therefore undertaken wherever possible in the country to be served. In pursuing this course, g.e at difficulties were naturally encountered. In Syria, for instance, 1000 different fonts of type were used in the produc-tion of a single Bible, while in Morocco it had been found necessary to write the whole Bible by hand and reproduce by photograph. St. Mark used to be a dif-ficult seller on account of the small size. This difficulty is now overcome by binding it in an attractive color. The society prints, binds and publishes in all parts of the world. The publishers of Japan are said to be twenty-five years in advance of the Oxford press in printing appliances. London, of course, was the chief point of distribu-tion.
