

CATHEDRAL HIGH TEA OPENED

Large Attendance Last Night A Large Attendance Last Night at Beginning of Bazaar, Which Will Last All Week—The Committee.

Last evening marked the opening of the annual high tea and bazaar of the Cathedral parish. The high tea, which is being held in the Y. M. C. I., will continue up to Saturday night and if the attendance last evening is any indication all signs point to its being a great success from a financial standpoint. The supper which was a beautiful meal was splendidly served. The various societies and organizations in the parish had charge of booths, wheels of fortune, punch boards, etc. The fair will be held each night up to and including Saturday and supper will be served every night except Friday and Saturday.

The various attractions last night had capable convener who, with their assistants, had no light task. The cashier and ticket convener was J. H. Cohan. The doorkeepers for the supper tables were E. Clarke and H. Harris. The ushers were F. J. McDonald, A. C. D. Wilson and F. D. McGuire.

The Supper Tables. The Cathedral supper table had decorations of pink roses in silver buckets and pale yellow candles in silver candlesticks. Mrs. Charles O'Reilly.

IN FURNISHING A HOME as in so many of life's enterprises—there is no time like the present to buy good furniture; and seldom, if ever, is it true that good furniture becomes cheaper. The chief woods from which good furniture is made, grow more scarce and more valuable each year. The chances are that good furniture will gradually increase in price.

Your family is growing up. See that your home is what it should be while your children are with you. Chesterfield sofas and dining room suites at big reductions. All Felt Mattresses at $8.40 and $11.50.

RECORD CROWDS AT IMPERIAL A Well Varied Programme Fills Big Keith House With Delighted Patrons.

Thanksgiving Day is always looked upon by show folks as the big day of the year, eclipsing the national holidays and the Yuletide gala dates. At the Imperial yesterday all records were smashed in the face of the high-water mark of counter attractions and the finest of weather. And the thousands of patrons saw a corking show—a regular, bounteous holiday bill of fare.

"Love Never Dies," King Vidor's latest production, was the special attraction, and it certainly possessed a well balanced cast, headed by Lloyd Hughes and Madge Bellamy.

Hughes, one of the cleverest and youngest leading men on the screen, has won an enviable reputation during the last year for his work in "Home-Coming" and "Mother of Mine." Previous to his success in these pictures he scored heavily in "The Turn of the Road," the production that won fame for the producer of "Love Never Dies."

Madge Bellamy, who shares honors with Hughes, is pictureland's latest and greatest "find." Less than a year ago she was playing on the stage in New York and had no thought of entering the silent drama.

Among the other members of the cast are Claire McDowell and Winifred Greenwood, two of the most capable character actresses in the industry. Frank Brownlee has been a celluloid villain ever since he entered pictureland a half dozen years ago. One of his outstanding portrayals was that of the bully in "The Brute Breaker." Joe Bennett is a player who has become a familiar name of times in night releases. Fred Gambo and Julie Brown, all well-known artists, have important roles. "Love Never Dies" was adapted by the director from "The Cottage of Delight" by N. Harter's popular novel. It is a sweet story of a youthful marriage, a misunderstanding, a train-wreck in which the broken-hearted young husband is thought to have been a victim; a second marriage of the husband and the suicidal end of the villainous character which clears up everything in the hostling tragedy was a thrilling piece of filming, as was the train wreck of first acts.

The comedy feature "St. John in a ludicrous affair entitled "All Wet," was a continuous roar of laughter, especially the under-water adventures with fish and mermaids. In the Pathé Weekly were pictures of the "Empress of the Day" and a truly charming setting of the feature picture with "Love's Old Sweet Song" as the most completed regular honest-to-goodness holiday bill. The same show is given today.

A Distinctly New Cromwellian Suite!

Although it is a gathering together of several favorite features, the style of dining suite shown in our north window follows the sturdy English furniture of Cromwell's time. The wood is genuine mahogany, in the dark old country finish that adds the charm of walnut tone.

The table is six legged and square with curved corners, lengthening to 8 feet. The buffet is an accomplishment in simple grace distinguished by lion's head handles. Three drawers separate the side compartments with a long one at the top. The china cabinet is of exceptional proportions with a linen drawer below. Chairs have Spanish leather upholstery.

Big Holiday Crowds Enjoy Fox Classic, "My Friend the Devil."

William Fox has disproved the theory that "there's nothing new under the sun."

In "My Friend, the Devil," the Fox special production which opened three days' engagement at the Queen Square Theatre yesterday, he brings forth upon the screen a new type of entertainment that was unanimous approval at its initial presentation here.

It contains every element necessary for real entertainment—a novel plot, a powerful theme, unexpected dramatic sequence, superlative portrayal, romance, thrills and a motive that will win the praise of every woman and child.

The photoplay is an adaptation from George Orne's famous novel, "Dr. Harnett" and to Harry Millarde must go the credit for another pierceman masterpiece. Mr. Millarde directed "Over the Hill," which is one of the triumphs of motion picture history.

The entire picture of "My Friend the Devil" has been correctly mounted and the types and costumes seem to step right from the pages of Orne's novel. Throughout the picture dramatic sequences follow one another in rapid-fire order, building up to a stirring climax.

The story deals with a man whose "faith in God had been washed away when his mother is killed by lightning while he was little more than a babe. He has called upon God to strike his brutal stepfather who was ill-treating his loving mother. "Over the Hill," which is one of the triumphs of motion picture history.

To Charles Richman as Dr. George Harnett must go the honor of contributing to screen literature one of the most powerful dramatic portrayals in the history of motion pictures. Peggy Shaw, as Dr. Dryden's daughter, also gives a remarkable depiction of a difficult part. Others in the cast whose exceptional work deserve mention are Beaulieu, William Towner, common clerk, up till yesterday noon Adolph Milar, Myrtle Stewart, Barbara Castleton, Mabel Wright, Alice May and Robert Fraser. The scenario, the people, and the present mayor, can be written by Paul H. Sloane, candidate for the Power Company.
