

YOUNG FOLKS

A Birthday Town.

One day, about three years ago, Dick and Dorothy paused at the railway crossing while on their way home from downtown. Old Uncle Hiram, the gatekeeper, whom everyone in Belmont knew and loved, was sitting at the door of his little house as they came along.

"My," said Uncle Hiram, "what big parcels for little folks to be carrying!"

"Well, you see," Dick explained, "we have been shopping for the birthday party."

"What birthday party?" asked Uncle Hiram as he looked up and down the track.

"The baby's," spoke up Dorothy. "Our little Billy, you know. He's three to-morrow, and we're going to give him the finest birthday party that ever was."

"Yes," said Dick, "we have a lot of toys, and there's going to be a big frosted cake with three candles."

"Think of that, now!" cried Uncle Hiram, slapping his knee. "It makes me wish I could have a birthday party myself."

"Why can't you have one?" asked Dorothy. "Everyone in town would love to come, I know."

"Yes," added Dick, "of course everyone would. Don't old folks—I mean, don't grown-up folks have birthdays?"

"Oh, yes, we old folks have lots of birthdays," chuckled Uncle Hiram. "We have them much more often than you young folks, too; but somehow we get out of the habit of having parties."

"That's too bad," said Dorothy. "What fun you miss! Now, if you will just tell us when your next birthday comes, we'll plan a real party for you."

Uncle Hiram did not laugh this time, but looked down hard at the bright eyes raised to his.

"I can think of something better than that," he said at last. "Do you know Aunt Lizzie Wheeler, who lives almost out to the North Road schoolhouse, with only a housekeeper for company? Well, she will be eighty years old next Monday. She has been too lame for years to get out of the house. If you want to make an old person happy with a birthday party, just take her up some flowers or a cake, or any little thing, to show her that some one remembers and cares."

"We'll do it!" cried Dorothy. "And I know that Bessie Fuller and her brother, Joe, and Madge Bowman, and Ted Rust and a lot of others will go with us."

Then she and Dick hurried home, so full of the idea of a birthday surprise for Aunt Lizzie Wheeler that they almost forgot the birthday party for Billy.

NEW BURGLAR ALARM.

How You May Scare a Hold-up Man Out of His Wits.

"Hands up!"

"Bang!"

"Ding! Dong! Dong-ong-ong!"

"Bang!"

This is the principle of a new burglar alarm devised by an inventor to rout bank robbers and holdup men. It's all a little, inconspicuous box holding a small fire going and five 38-caliber cartridges.

Mr. Robber comes into the store or bank. Hands go up all around. Somebody leans against a desk or steps on a loose board and the noise bombardment lets loose. The cartridges are fired at intervals of ten seconds.

Any number of small wires lead from the bandit alarm with push buttons. The buttons are concealed beneath a rug under a window for the house thief or behind a panel or back of a drawer in a desk in a store or office.

The robber steps on the rug or the merchant leans against the false drawer. Noise is infinitely more annoying to him than bullets, so he may well wish himself in a Verdun trench when the alarm is released.

The principle of the alarm is psychological. It is a well-known scientific fact that a robber, keyed up to a high nerve tension, is thrown off his mental balance by any unusual happening. This is true of the house-hold robber and doubly true of the holdup man, who conducts his campaigns of crime face to face with his victim.

In your home the discharge of five shots and the ringing of an alarm bell would send the robber helter-skelter for cover. He would flee ignominiously—any place to get away from the dreadful noise.

Should he hold up a bank, however, and in the midst of his robbery hear the shots and the bell it is extremely likely that he would be paralyzed with fear and stand rooted to the spot, for a moment at least. That would be time enough for the bank officials, who habitually are armed, to draw their own weapons and make the robber surrender.

Luck must be feminine because it is so uncertain.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic Is All You Need.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives, as so many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the system. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood, which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed, men, women and children bright, active and strong.

L. R. Whitman, Harmony Mills, N.S., says: "As a tonic and strength builder, I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills wonderful. My whole system was badly run down, and although I faithfully took a tonic given me by my doctor I could note no improvement. Then I began Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and was soon restored to my old time health. I can most heartily endorse this medicine."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LONDON PRICES SOARING.

Necessities Show Rise During War of 15 to 50 Per cent.

While a very great deal has been heard of the enormous rise in the price of food and other necessities that has taken place in Germany and other enemy countries little attention has been paid to the very great increase in the cost of living in London.

The following list of prices has been specially compiled in a locality where the population is thick and the competition especially keen. Even a cursory glance at them shows that every-day necessities like bread, onions, firewood, coal, cheese, milk, soda, soap, and matches all show an increase of from 15 to 50 per cent.

EXPERIMENTS.

Teach Things of Value.

Where one has never made the experiment of leaving off tea or coffee and drinking Postum, it is still easy to learn something about it by reading the experiences of others.

Drinking Postum is a pleasant way out of tea or coffee troubles. A man writes:

"My wife was a victim of nervousness, weak stomach and loss of appetite for years, and although we resorted to numerous methods for relief, one of which was a change from coffee to tea, it was all to no purpose." (Both tea and coffee are injurious to many persons, because they contain the subtle, poisonous drug, caffeine.)

"We knew coffee was causing the trouble, but could not find anything to take its place until we tried Postum. Within two weeks after she quit coffee and began using Postum almost all of her troubles had disappeared as if by magic. It was truly wonderful. Her nervousness was gone, stomach trouble relieved, appetite improved, and, above all, a night's rest was complete and refreshing."

"This sounds like an exaggeration, as it all happened so quickly. Each day there was improvement, for the Postum was undoubtedly strengthening her. Every particle of this good work was due to drinking Postum in place of coffee." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c pkgs.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both forms are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

VERDUN FIREMEN ARE REAL HEROES

REMAINED IN TOWN TO SAVE IF FROM FLAMES.

They Worked Daily Under Fire and Hid in Cellar During Bombardment.

This is the story of the heroes of Verdun. It will not abound in detail. Little is known as yet. But France knows that some old men lived there—and died—ag bravely as any men in all the history of France.

Senator Humbert told the story when he returned to Paris from Verdun the other day. Because he is a Senator he had been enabled to visit the beleaguered city. What he told has been dovetailed in with what others have heard. Little news has leaked through the military lines in the many weeks of the battle. In the intense interest felt by all in the major event the old men who merely lived on there, doing their duty, were forgotten.

The heroes—the real heroes—of Verdun are the town firemen. Two civilians have figured in previous stories. It is not positively known how this pair managed to remain behind when every other man and woman and child was forced by the soldiers to flee from the rain of German shells. One of them has some ill-defined occupation which has been recognized by the soldiers. The other owned a home in Verdun. When visitors came to the city now he waits, smiling, as though in propitiation, until he can gain their attention. "Come with me," he begs.

So the visitors go with him. By-and-bye they come to the shattered wall, which is all that remains of what was once a handsome house. The man who once owned it stands on the pile of stone which mark what was once a doorway, and beckons to the visitors.

"Come in," he says. "I bid you welcome. This is my home."

But the civilians, however, have not the appeal to make that the old firemen have. When the war began the younger men of the Fire Department were mobilized. Some were not needed then, but as months passed by they found their way into the army. Manifestly the town could not be left without protection from fire. So men who had served in former years in the Fire Department and had been supernumerary volunteered their services. Little by little old men joined, until at last there were enough for a full company.

Then the Germans attacked Verdun. Old Firemen Remained.

The civilians—man, woman and child—were ordered out. The old firemen would not go. They were in the service of the State just as much as any man who festers in a trench or runs forward cheering against the white flashes of the mitrailleuse. Most of them had sons at the front. Some had lost sons in the war. Life was as sweet to these old men as it is to any man in the security of Paris. But they stayed. Their duty lay plain before them. It was to guard the town.

There are gendarmes there, it is true. They see to it that no one touches property in Verdun that belongs to another. Every window is closed and shuttered, and every door is locked. Now and then a 380 shell comes hurtling through the air with that gurgling scream it favors, sounds somehow like a locomotive being strangled to death in a tunnel, and falls upon a house. Then the gendarmes walk to the scene in their theatrical blue capes and caps, or bicycle to it if the street approach is sufficiently free of masses of stone and brick. They solemnly write out their report, that in some future time the city archives shall bear witness to the fact that on a day of February, 1916, Alphonse Picot's house was destroyed by a German shell.

Always they find the old firemen there. The gendarmes are not pressed for time, you comprehend. If they do not make their report to-day, then it may well be made to-morrow. But the old firemen must hurry. Fire is fire to them, an enemy to be fought whether it has its origin in a stuffed flue or is carried over fifteen kilometres by a German gun. The property of their townsmen must be saved. They fight the flames wherever they spring up and save what property they can, and in their turn make their report. Then they go back to the cellar that serves them for headquarters and wait for the next alarm.

Few Fires in Verdun.

Oddly enough, there have been very few fires in Verdun. A French town is solidly built, for one thing. The roofs are tile and the walls are stone and the floors are hardwood that would hardly burn until it had been split with an axe. Also a descending shell produces such a havoc of mortar that any incipient flame may be quenched in the stifling dust. But the old firemen do their duty as they see it. Sometimes they trundle an old hand apparatus through the choked streets. More often a bucket and a wet cloth will serve the moment's need.

Humbert found the old men crouching in their cellars. Perfectly composed they were, as though they were used to cities collapsing over them, and a crash came, and a cloud of mortar dust arose. They plodded out methodically to look at the damage—these old ones, as one says in the French way—and cautioned Humbert to keep under cover until they returned. By-and-bye they came back and threw off the shrapnel helmets that they wear in going about where the air may at a moment fill with cutting slivers of white-hot metal, and told Humbert what had happened, and settled down to wait for the next shell.

They need not have served, these men. Some of them, I am told, have been killed. One expects courage of a soldier and of young men. These men were old.

BIRDS AND GLASS.

Sometimes Fly Through Windows of Country Houses.

It has been frequently noticed that no wild bird can understand the properties of glass, and great numbers, ranging in size from a pheasant to a titmouse, are killed by flying against the windows of country houses.

If a room possesses a large mirror reflecting the view seen through an open window birds are particularly liable to be deceived, and especially if frightened, into thinking that they can fly through it.

Sparrow hawks will sometimes chase their intended victims into strange places. Some years ago a member of this species pursued a small bird through the open window of a railway carriage in motion. In its blinded determination to secure the panting fugitive it entangled its claws in the meshes of the hat rack and was ignominiously slain by an astonished passenger with an umbrella.

She Did Not Heed the Danger Signals

BUT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HER DIABETES.

Mrs. McDonald Might Have Saved Herself Months of Pain, Sleeplessness and Anxiety by Using Dodd's Kidney Pills Earlier.

Grand Narrows, Victoria Co., N.S., May 1st.—(Special.)—That Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure kidney disease in its worst form is evidenced by the case of Mrs. Roderick McDonald, a estimable resident of this place. Mrs. McDonald suffered from diabetes for two years, and found her first relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I am sure I would be in my grave to-day but for Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mrs. McDonald states. "The doctor attended me for five months for diabetes, but I was worse when I started taking his medicine than when I started. I could not get a wink of sleep. As soon as I started taking Dodd's Kidney Pills I fell in a solid sleep for one hour, and soon I got so that I could sleep fine."

"Dodd's Kidney Pills have done so much for me that I feel like recommending them to everybody."

Mrs. McDonald states that her early symptoms were a shortness of breath, dizziness, backache and a bitter taste in her mouth in the morning. All these are symptoms of kidney trouble—danger signals that no one can afford to neglect. Had she heeded them and taken Dodd's Kidney Pills she would have saved herself months of pain and anxiety.

PERMANENT BAN ON RUM.

Bill Has Been Introduced Into the Russian Duma.

A bill has been introduced into the Russian Duma to put into effect the government's promise that the war prohibition of alcoholic drinks shall continue in force after the war. The bill, as summarized by the Novoye Vremya, provides:

"It is forbidden to produce alcohol for the purposes of manufacture of vodka. Equally prohibited is the import of alcohol from foreign countries and from the Grand Duchy of Finland. The production of alcohol by private institutions and persons, either for sale or for their own consumption or for household purposes, is also prohibited.

"The production of alcohol for technical or medical purposes is to be carried on by the government directly or through contractors. The government has the sole right to sell spirits for these purposes.

"The sale of light wines is only allowed in towns. In provinces and districts which grow grapes the sale of wine—not on draught—is allowed. The limit of alcohol for different kinds of wines is to be fixed by the government.

"The sale of beer is allowed only in towns. The government is also to fix for beer the limit of alcohol. Town councils have the right to issue regulations limiting or prohibiting altogether the sale of beer or light wines.

The government's position in the matter was thus outlined by Mr. Bark, Minister of Finance, in his budget speech:—"Among the factors which have helped to keep our budget balance it is impossible to overestimate the new factor in the economic life of our country—the total abstinence from alcoholic drinks. The success of this measure, which cannot be completely realized, is such that I am bound to state most emphatically that the prohibition is not to be abolished after the war."

As a train was getting up steam to leave a certain station, it suddenly parted in the middle. Of course, the communication cord broke and one end of it struck an old lady, who was standing on the platform, in the face.

"Goodness me!" she gasped in astonishment. "What was that?"

"The train has broken in two, madam," said a gentleman who stood near by.

"And I should just think so!" said the old lady indignantly, as she eyed the broken cord. "Did they really think that a piece of string like that could hold a train together?"

What Affected the Barber.

A man entered a barber shop for the purpose of being shaved. As he was somewhat hollow-cheeked, the barber, as is the custom in some country districts put his thumb in the customer's mouth, in order to press out the cheek.

Suddenly the razor slipped, making a great gash in the man's face, and he sprang to his feet with a yell of pain and anger.

"Shut up, man!" said the barber, holding up his hand. "I've cut my thumb!"
