

That Enfield Zepp.

When a Chatham House man, with the tune of "Back Home in Tennessee" still running in his head from the previous night's concert, read in the morning paper the thrilling story of the destruction of the super-Zepp at Enfield, the following rhapsody at once flowed forth.

Back home in Germany
 Thou Zepp wilt never be ;
 Though on his bended knee,
 Count Zeppelin prayed for thee.
 All folks could think of that night,
 Were the searchlights flashing bright.
 Shells were crashing, bombs were smashing,
 All the sky alight.
 The people at their doors,
 Were shouting out encores.
 Our airmen brought it low,
 And crowds began to flow.
 Yes, they were right there to greet it,
 Just imagine how the'd greet it ;
 When it came down, when it came down,
 To its doom by London Town.
