Question:

Is Remembrance Day still a relevant holiday? Why?

↑ "We have to honour those who died for a purpose. However, it doesn't mean much to me because I don't know much about Canadian history. I guess it gives me time to study." - Themba Moyo, 3rd year Health Education, Zimbabwe.

↑ "I think it is a relevant holiday because it would be an injustice to forget the people who gave their lives so we could live ours." Neil A. MacFarlane Esq., 3rd year Psychology/Political Science, Halifax.

↑ "I think Remembrance Day is important. We live in a great country and we need to remember those who died in the war for our freedom today." Meg Wallace, 3rd year Recreation, Lakefield, ON.

↑ "No it's not. The only reason I know about it is because of the break on Monday." Tracey Major, 3rd year Biology, Bahamas.

↑ "Yes it is worthwhile because many people died while fighting for a good cause. I think it's only right that we admire and appreciate what these men and women did for us." Wayne Bishop, 2nd year Recreation.

↑ "It is because we wouldn't have this standard of life today if those folks hadn't given their lives during the First and Second World Wars." Jarnail Singh, 4th year Engineering, Halifax.

↑ "I guess it is relevant because these people have sacrificed their lives for us." Mary Sedarous, 3rd year Biology/Neuroscience, Egypt.

↑ Remembrance Day is still a very important holiday. It reminds us of our past mistakes and makes sure they don't happen again. It also reminds us of the people who gave their lives so we can live ours." Andrew Ferns, 4th year Political Science, Calgary, AB.
