it better to have his good will His Honor gave the claimant £ 10. expressed to be for good conduct, and His Honor considers the claim not only absolutely extinguished but amply paid by the £ 10 which was certainly more than any good he ever did though perhaps a trifle in comparison to the mischief he might have made.

With regard to the second claim which is apparently strengthened by a copy of a letter from M. McKay, the services consisted in going after a band of Sioux, who were disappointed in seeing the
