C.E.F. Feeding Methods

Jane Bogis Aggie, the new world's champion cow, all breeds and ages, in butter production for periods from 1 to 120 days.

It is also interesting to note the following: 50 lbs. average cow's milk contains 79.53 lbs. water, .65 lbs. ash, 3.24 lbs. protein, 4.41 lbs. carbohydrates, 3.26 lbs. fat.

Although these heifers, producing 92 to 97 1/2 lbs. milk per day, did not costly average 3 lbs. fat each per day in their 7-day record, yet they consumed approximately 2.34 lbs. digestible protein and 10.03 lbs. digestible carbohydrate and fat per pound product or fat produced in milk.

Feeding Whey to Calves

Is whey (which has been heated at the factory to make it sweet), good to feed to calves? Does it pay to feed it to calves instead of milk?

(1) Whey has considerable feeding value for certain classes of live stock.
It contains about 7% solids, including the greater part of albumen of milk, nearly all the sugar of milk, and some ash. Warm sweet whey can be fed to calves with more or less success, provided care is exercised in keeping the feeding pails perfectly clean. Some authorities even claim it has half the value of skim milk for calves. Having such a large sugar content, it sours very quickly, the sugar being changed to acid by the bacteria present, hence if great care is not observed in feeding it to calves, digestive troubles are almost certain to follow. Provided milk is available, there is just a question about the wisdom of feeding sour whey to calves. However, if milk is not to be had a little whey might be substituted for calves over one month old. They should be started off with very little and this gradually increased until they will be getting say 10 to 12 lbs. per day, taking about ten days to work up to the full amount.
Sour whey would, without doubt, give a much better return if fed to pigs.
It is estimated that 700 lbs. of whey, either sweet or sour, is equal to 100 lbs. grain when fed to pigs at the rate of three to five lbs. to one lb.
grain.
