of the whole to consider the resolu tion, devoting some little time to its dessication. In the opinion of all the members there was a striking nanimity, the only thing causing any wonderment being the belief that but little could be accomplished with a sum so small. The monthly appropriation of $100, it was explain ed, did not provide for the establishnent of the office which at present is bare of the necessities of an assayer.

An addition sum of $400 was asked for and given which purchases the plant desired and which remains the property of the government. Clarke desired to know if the assayer would ecome an employee of the government and be under the direction of the commissioner, to which the latter replied that the assayer would most certainly be under a system of checks by which it would be possible to see that the service demanded had mittee on civil justice will meet at his salary would be issued.
