Her Husband's Friend.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Do you ever praise your husband's friends? You, in this case, means wives, of course, but as all women are potential if not actual wives, I hope no woman will lay this article aside merely because she isn't at present of the matrimonial estate.

As for the men, well, I know all husbands will prick up their ears when they read that question, and bachelors don't matter.

The great complaisance which the average American husband shows in permitting his wife to select the friends with whom they shall spend most of their leisure time, and in entertaining and associating with her family rather than his, is something I have remarked upon before. I think it exists partly because in this country (I believe the opposite true abroad) the ties between a woman and her family are stronger than those between a man and his, and also because the American business man is so absorbed in his business that he leaves the arranging of all social relationships to his wife.

And This is The Reward He Gets.

But one aspect of this matter I do not either like or understand, and that is the antagonism the average wife seems to feel for her husband's masculine bachelor friends. Surely his complaisance deserves some better return. And yet I know many otherwise kind, thoughtful, unselfish women who reward their husband's complaisance in entertaining and associating with their friends by resenting the rare occasions when he wants to entertain his old-time friends.

Some Are Open In Their Dislike.

Some openly express this dislike; others, while pretending to have no objection to their husbands' friends, are always making deprecatory comments upon them; still others do not even admit the dislike to themselves, but cannot keep it entirely out of their manner. There is no real graciousness in their welcome of the bachelor friend; they cannot keep the atmosphere of constraint from being palpable, nor entirely conceal their relaxation and relief when he is gone.

It is a strange and unworthy kind of jealousy, this, resentment of theirs. I do not like it. And they could give so much pleasure by a little decency and graciousness, a little tolerance.

One Woman Had Her Eyes Opened.

A young married friend of mine told me the other day of an experience of hers which gave rise to my first question. She had always disliked her husband's favorite bachelor friend—a man of great worth, unfortunately obscured by a diffident manner. Wife-like, she had taken no pains to conceal this dislike. By a circumstance enforced proximity she had grown to know this man better, and one day said something in praise of him to her husband. She said her husband's delight at the words of appreciation was really touching. "It opens my eyes," she said, "and since then I've tried to see the good instead of the bad in my husband's bachelor friends, and to see what a good time I could give them whenever they came instead of how few I could make their visits. I can tell you, virtue has been doubly its own reward both in my husband's pleasure and in what I get out of it myself."

I hope her experience may open some other woman's eyes, too.

Department Stores.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old St. John's."

Department stores were invented in the country villages, each of which has its "general store," in which clothing, plows, butter, coffins, magazines and ice-cream are dispensed. But of late years they have been so greatly enlarged and improved by the great cities that the visitors from the rural districts do not know them and are greatly impressed by the novelty of the idea.

A department store is a mass meeting of various businesses under one roof, which makes it possible for one to buy fish, fiddles and fire extinguishers without hoisting an umbrella between each purchase. Department stores also sell goods very cheaply and never charge $3 for an article when they can mark it down to $2.96 and hold a great clearance sale. This policy has made these stores immensely popular and they have grown until some of them are as large as the Rock of Gibraltar and would undertake cheerfully to put in a full stock of these rocks in their basement notions departments if there was any corner for them.

Department stores sell dry goods, jewelry, clothing, horse-blankets, cough syrup, canned soup, aeroplanes, false teeth, automobiles, cement walks, milch cows, motor boats, fancy vests, lightning rods, radium, artificial legs, piano players, celloloid eggs, fingerings, tooth-brushes, elephant soap, diamond tarts, rat poison, family trees, hall trees and other articles too numerous to mention, but all set forth in large page advertisements which have made these stores the greatest patrons of literature in modern times. A medium-sized department store is a block square and twelve stories high, with restaurants, rest rooms, moving pictures, house physicians, guides, subway stations, chapels, hospitals, morgues and recreation parks on the roof. The greatest display of department stores in Chicago is on the east side of State Street, which is 12 stories high for half a mile and is never finished because there is always a grand opening sale at one end and a grand enlargement slaughter sale at the other.

Department stores are greatly beloved by women because of their bargain sales, which are held at special hours and form a charming substitute for a foot-ball, which is making athletes of American women. Men are not so partial to these stores, because of the great cruelties practiced on them by their wives. It is no uncommon thing to see an American man stand in the silk department of a department store for two hours with his arms full of bargains, waiting just a minute for his wife, who is trying on hats in the millinery department eight floors up and a half a block southeast.

THE HAS-BEENS.

I read the papers every day, and oft encounter tales, which show there's hope for every day who in life's battle fails. I've just been reading of a gent who joined the has-been ranks, at fifty years without a cent, or credit at the banks. But undismayed he buckled down, refusing to be beat, and captured fortune and renown; he's now in Easy street. Men say that fellows down and out never leave the rocky track, but facts will show, beyond a doubt, that has-beens do come back. I know, for I who write this rhyme, when forty-odd years old, was down and out, without a dime, my whiskers full of mold. By black disaster I was trounced until it jarred my spine; I was a failure so pronounced I didn't need a sign. And after I had soaked my coat, I said (at forty-three), "I'll see if I can catch the goat that has escaped from me." I labored hard; I strained my dome, to do my daily grind, until in triumph I came home, my billy-goat behind. And any man who still has health may with the winners sweat, and have a chance at fame and wealth—for has-beens do come back.

The Goat Outrage

CITY IMPOUNDER UP AGAIN

A solution to the problem of stealing the goats from Windsor, Earle, of Battery Road, was found at last evening in the Central District Court when judgment was given against City Impounder Dessert (Duffett) and better known as goat-hauler.

The morning session of the court, which the Telegram referred to yesterday, adjourned at 1 p.m. and that time all the witnesses and plaintiff were examined. Mr. Higgins and Carter, counsel for plaintiff and defendant, respectively, and it was shown that Dessert's assistants visited Mrs. Earle's on the 22nd and 29th of December and took two goats the first time and five the second.

Mrs. Earle swore that on the 22nd night she put up her goat in a window, badly frightened and looking down saw a man go through a door at her. She and 3 children were in the room she dropped down a "white" and the burglars know she was hearing the retorts: "W. Earle, anything to-night?" "under weapon, Bill, and fire," etc. She said. Other circumstances happened at that juncture, as Mrs. Earle, are too touching to repeat. Constable Stamp gave testimony that they saw men, including Dessert, at the Military Road with goats. The court asked Dessert why he was bringing them to the Sanitary and he replied that he was what to do with them. Dessert, D. Simms, witnesses for Dessert, admitted that they were on the first night. Dessert swore he was with the second occasion. All agreed that they were engaged to help him, that the goats were taken to a stable on Flower Street and slaughtered and that the portions of the goats for sale. The impounder offered a fence.

In summing up Mr. Higgins denied Dessert and his strongest terms and pointed out that action should be taken against him suggesting that the S. S. action for slaughtering animals in presence of others and that the Authorities take action for the same.
